Mr. B—drove up in a hansom and entered the jeweler's shop, accompanied by his valet, who carried an oblong box of steel. Mr. B—asked for a private interview, and, on being shown into the office, he opened the box, exposing a splendid array of diamond and pearl necklace, earrings, tiaras and rings.

"Mrs. B—" he said, "is now abroad. Before she returns I want you to extract these stones and replace them with good imitations, selling the real jewels and giving me the money. This, of course, is to be a confidential transaction. Mrs. B— is to know nothing of it."

"My dear sir," said the jeweler, "I should be glad to do as you ask, but it is impossible. Two years ago Mrs. B— called here on the same errand that now brings you, and this errand, in her case, was successful. The paste jewels that you offer me are worth little more than the hire of the hansom awaiting you outside."

"Dressing" went his bedroom bell. The hotel attendant smiled sourly. This was the fourth time he had been summoned, and he did not hurry.

"I thought you were never coming," exclaimed the visitor when the attendant appeared at last. "Are you nicknamed 'Slowcoach'?"

"No, sir," answered the attendant. "They call me 'Billard Cue'."

"Billard Cue?" repeated the visitor, frowning. Then an inspiration dawned. "Ah, because you're such a stick. I suppose?" he asked.

"Wrong again, sir," retorted the attendant. "It's because I work better with a good tip."

PERSONALITY OF GENERAL BOOTH

General William Booth.

WHEN the recollection of thousands there was a time when the Salvation Army was held up to ridicule and opprobrium, when the soldiers were stoned and imprisoned, and when the drums were smashed to matchwood or cut open and filled with tar.

Mr. Booth Tucker in his "Life of Mrs. Booth" says: "One of the most cruel and prolonged persecutions took place in 1881 at the little town of Basingstoke, the mayor of which was a brewer."

"Alarmed at the rapid decline of their trade, the publicans hired the roughs with unlimited supplies of liquor to attack the Salvation Army, the mayor professing to be unable to afford them the protection of the law."

"Time after time the brave little band, headed by their two girl officers, faced the drink-maddened mob, from whom they received the most cruel treatment, but at length the reprimands of the home secretary, Sir William Harcourt, produced their effect, and quiet was restored."

The change that has come over public opinion is not less creditable than remarkable, and its genesis was due to the fact that, true to his characteristics, the "man in the street" had misunderstood the purpose of the army.

Founder of Army.

As a mere boy William Booth was "converted," and created a great disturbance in the Methodist chapel he attended by bringing some of the riff-raff of the town to the services. He became a local preacher, then an evangelist, and finally, with his able and devoted wife, cut loose from all church organizations, founded his own East London Revival mission, which ultimately developed into the Salvation Army.

The crisis of William Booth's life came in the late '80's and the manner in which he grappled with it shows the genius of the man—rather he would call it the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Indeed, there was a woman when the drum beating had done its work, when the crude phrases and hysterical shriekings had found their level, when, in short, the Salvation Army's work seemed done. Without William Booth at that moment the army would have faded away into the dim procession of religious ripples on the surface of life. But here came in the genius of the general.

Undoubtedly, General Booth has succeeded in making a deep impression upon men of his own generation. Being a man always on the alert for ideas, he saw that the man who is "saved" in a hysterical moment is not safe; that whatever may be the driving power of the Gospel there is the stomach and even the surroundings to consider; that if you set a man's foot on the lowest step of the "ladder to God" he wants a shove to aid him up the next step. We can easily imagine the searchings of heart of that wily tactician when he saw that the drums and the shrieking led only to the first step.

An English Institution. Moreover, the general earned his title by the splendid flank movement upon humanity when he determined that the sinner with his foot on the bottom rung must be helped up the ladder to God, and to have seen at the crucial moment the danger, to have written and published "In Darkest England and the Way Out," was the real triumph of the general, for he saved the army and, incidentally, he has saved many other people. As a matter of fact, the Salvation Army has passed through its earlier trials; it has become an established institution in our midst.

Apart from his distinctly religious work, General Booth is chiefly interesting as almost the only Briton of our time who has made any distinct impression upon any considerable number of foreigners. No doubt Herbert Spencer had a great influence upon thinkers, and Darwin a still greater; but neither Darwin nor Herbert Spencer is a personality to any of those whose whole philosophy of life has been more or less colored by their teachings.

Mr. Gladstone was the last who had anything approaching to a personal influence on the continent, and he was to a certain degree an international man. Lord Rosebery runs over to Italy every now and then, but he neither desires nor seeks to exert an influence which comes from personal contact with the people in foreign lands.

Booth's Continental Labors.

General Booth stands alone as the one man who addresses public meetings abroad, and is in active living contact with at least some departments of the national life of foreigners. Curiously enough, he is innocent of any other language but his own, but he has addressed vast audiences in nearly every capital on the continent, and in this respect General Booth's position is unique.

In all northern Europe, with the exception of Russia, and not excepting Finland, we will find men and women banded together as organized units of the organization of which General Booth is the founder and chief, but his influence is not confined to Europe. He has on several occasions traveled through the United States and Canada, and everywhere vast crowds gathered together to hear the words of life from his lips.

He has visited Australia and India; in fact, he has become one of the shuttles in the loom of the empire, and he is probably the only British religious teacher who is equally popular at home and in English-speaking lands. If all mankind are brothers, as we are supposed to believe, General Booth deserves credit for being probably one who knows more members of the family to speak to than any other living man.

The "man in the street," who for some time past has been more or less glorying in the extent of the influence of Britain and the might and majesty of the British name, may at least reflect profitably upon the fact that General Booth has done more to familiarize the nations of the world with British ideas and British energy than any other living person.

Notwithstanding all his limitations, General Booth is a great and good man and will go down to posterity as a great organizer of social reform, rather than as the leader of a new religious movement. He has always caught the changing situation on the change and he has grown with growing demands.

The young man who wandered about Mile End waste wondering what could be done for this perverse generation—the tall, spare form of the head of the army, with his hooked nose and his hair snowed by many winters—the old man with an army of thousands behind him; commissariat, medical service, all arrayed, the accounts in order; prophet, philanthropist, organizer of victory—we can scarcely sum up that fiery old man in a phrase. Not only do people recognize the general, but accord him the tribute of love and respect.

Jones Wound It Up.

Jones was just putting on his overcoat when he casually remarked to Mrs. Jones that he would be working over-time that night.

"Don't wait for me, dear," he remarked. "I may be rather later than usual. But there, it can not be helped."

At breakfast next morning he was stonily silent, and the stillness of the room was not even broken by the ticking of the clock on the mantelpiece.

"Mary, dear," remarked Jones presently, "there is something wrong with the clock. I wound it up last night, too."

"Oh, no, you didn't," said Mrs. Jones, jeily. "What you did wind up was Teddy's musical box, and when you came to bed at 3 o'clock this morning it was playing 'Home, Sweet Home!'"

Aeroplane Night Work.

Night scouting in aeroplanes equipped with searchlights has been tried for the first time in the army aviation school at College Park, Md. Successful surveys were made and returning the machines landed without the aid of watch fires. Captain Beck piloted one machine, with Lieutenant Arnold manipulating the searchlight, and Lieutenants Milling and Kirtland, respectively, were at the steering wheel and light in the other. The aviators were in the air long enough to demonstrate the practical value of lights for night flying.

Teachers Examined in Library Science.

Mrs. T. R. Brewitt, librarian at the Lewiston Normal, in a recent interview said: "The law now requires candidates for second-grade certificates in Idaho to pass an examination in Cataloging and Use of School Libraries. As most teachers are not familiar with library science, I have prepared a pamphlet as an aid to those who will take the examinations, as well as for those who wish to inform themselves in school library management. Upon request, this will be sent without charge to any who wish it."

Root Suggests Peace Prayer.

New York.—Absolute cessation, so far as possible, of the activities of 150,000,000 English-speaking people throughout the world for five minutes for silent prayer and contemplation is a suggestion which Senator Root of New York has made for the celebration of the 100th anniversary of peace among English-speaking peoples. The date suggested is February 17, 1915, the date of ratification of the treaty of Ghent.

She—And knowing my sentiments on the subject, did that odious Mr. Binks insult you by offering you a drink?

He—That's what Mr. Binks did.

She—And how did you resent it?

He (meekly)—I swallowed the insult.

Connecticut, Again.

B. E. Moore of Winsted, Conn., claims to have the most up-to-date hen-house in the world. The framework of the building is of pipes, which are filled with steam and automatically keep the house at even temperature. The eaves empty into a storage tank, from which the water is piped to a trough automatically regulated.

An alarm clock in a room over the henery releases a lever at feeding time and allows sufficient grain for one feeding to descend through a pipe into the feeding basins. In the bottom of each nest is an opening with a trap-door through which the eggs, as they are laid, drop into a pipe leading into Moore's home.

As they pass down this pipe they are automatically stamped with the date. At breakfast time each morning steam is turned into the pipe and the eggs are cooked as they pass from the henery to the house.

Government to Show Sheep.

Washington.—The department of agriculture will be among the exhibitors at the International Live Stock exposition to be held in Chicago, December 2 to 9, and the National Mid-winter Sheep show in connection with the National Wool Growers' association convention in Omaha, December 13 to 16. The government entry will be two yearling sheep bred and owned by the department.

No More Fast Silk Trains.

There will be no more record-breaking races of silk trains from ocean to ocean, because of an agreement of eastern lines to limit the running time between Chicago and New York to 28 hours.
