MONTANA NEWS.

Reta Carter, a five-year old daughter of J. W. Carter, was drowned in Prickly Pear creek last week.

Twenty carloads of young cattle arrived in Billings yesterday for the Willard Cattle Company, whose range is north of the Musselshell.

The ubiquitous "soap man," who has been swindling fools in Montana towns for a year past, has established his "fake" in Bozeman streets.

The Bozeman Courier will not have the Associated Press dispatches just now. It does not feel disposed to pay the price required—$65 per week.

The "oldest inhabitant" of Bozeman says that the rain-fall in that locality during the present month has been greater than in any year during his experience.

Some thirty men have left Benton for the Judith to drive a band of 4,000 cattle to the Northwest Territory. They were purchased recently from the Judith Cattle Company.

The railroad bridges over the east and west Gallatin are in danger of being swept away by the high water washing out the piling. The same fears are entertained with regard to the Townsend bridge.

A ten-year old daughter of A. J. Smith, of Bozeman, died very suddenly last week. It is supposed that she died from the effect of poisonous weeds eaten in a meal of greens which she had gathered and prepared.

J. J. Hill, the St. Paul railroad king, has scripted the land on each side of the river at the falls of the Missouri. It is surmised that he intends to utilize the matchless water power for manufacturing purposes.

Among the tourists now in the National Park are J. Mullin, of the Watertown Times, New York; Lieut. S. C. Mills, 12th Infantry, U. S. A.; Dr. G. L. Gates, of Ninona, Wis., and John and Henry Castle, of Minneapolis.

A Minneapolis tenderfoot used his revolver freely but harmlessly in Bozeman a day or two ago and paid $50 for the privilege. He said he thought there would be no trouble about a small thing of that kind in Montana.

The Miles City Daily Press celebrated its first anniversary yesterday. The paper has passed through a few of the vicissitudes incident to the infancy of a newspaper, but seems in prosperous condition now. We wish it continued success.

Ira D. Sankey, the noted evangelistic singer spent Sunday in Bozeman on his way from New York to the Pacific coast. The Methodist congregation wanted him to give them some music Sunday evening but he hurriedly took the train and passed out of their reach.

The Willard Mining Company, operating at Emigrant Gulch, allows holders of one thousand or more shares of its capital stock who wish to work independent of the company to have sluice-heads of water at minimum rates per inch, and gravel claims of their own selection at low rental rates.

Near the Stalactite caves in the National Park, there is a poisonous gas tube very properly named Stygian cave, where birds drop dead in merely flying over its mouth. It is most beautiful to the eye. The crystalline pendants are of a deep emerald. But the sulphurous gases are inimical to life. Small animals taking shelter there perish immediately. One of Dr. Gate's party went down into it and without any very painful sensation became faint with a rushing as of water in his ears, indicating the first stages of asphyxia.—Chronicle.

Nights of Enchantment.

Another good sized audience greeted Prof. Lewis last night and if round upon round of applause is any criterion to go by his efforts to please were appreciated. The performance is far ahead of anything of similar nature ever presented in Montana. To-night the professor gives his last entertainment, and without doubt the hall will be filled to overflowing, as the admission has been reduced to 50 cents, without extra charge for reserved seats, which can be secured at the postoffice.

NEWS NOTES.

Alex. Wyatt, a Steubenville, Ohio, murderer, cheated the gallows by hanging himself in his cell on the eve of his prospective execution.

In London, England, six persons charged with complicity in the recent dynamite explosion in that city are on trial charged with high treason.

On the 11th inst., Charles Pollock, of Vincennes, Indiana, shot and killed his newly married wife and then killed himself. No cause is assigned.

Last Monday Samuel C. Dawes, an attorney of Terre Haute, Indiana, attempted to murder John C. Lamb, congressman from that district. The trouble arose out of a lawsuit in which they appeared as opposing attorneys.

It is reported that Crook has recrossed the boundary and is now in Arizona. He has with him 230 Indian prisoners, mostly old and decrepit males, squaws and children. His command is in good condition and has suffered no loss.

A St. Paul telegram of the 11th inst. says: "Governor Sandborn made a speech to-day before the Chamber of Commerce giving statistics of St. Paul, summarizing the prospects and predicting a great influx of tourists for the Northwest, and especially Yellowstone Park."

Beloit, Wisconsin, was visited by a cyclone on Monday last. Three men were killed and property destroyed to a great amount. On the evening previous North Vernon, an Indiana town, suffered severely from the same cause. This cyclone devastation is getting terribly common in the east. Already this season hundreds of lives have been lost and millions of dollars worth of property demolished by this destroying agent.

Peter Cooper.

Peter Cooper was born in the city of New York, Feb. 12, 1791, and died there on the 5th of April, 1883. His family were distinguished for their unwavering devotion to the cause of American independence. His father was a Lieutenant in the patriot army, and his maternal grandfather sacrificed a large fortune in the cause of freedom. Up to his seventeenth year, Peter followed the various avocations of his father—hatter, brewer, brick-maker and again brewer—which he carried on in Peekskill, Catskill, Brooklyn and Newburg, N. Y. During his apprenticeship to the coach-making business, which lasted four years, from his 17th to his 21st year, he invented a mortising machine, which was of much pecuniary benefit to his master, but none to himself. Without capital, he went to work making machines for shearing cloth, for which he was paid $1.50 a day for three years. At the end of that time he had saved enough money to buy the right of the State of New York for manufacturing the machines, and embarked in business on his own account. He was successful, and aided his father and, as he naively said, "in consequence of this my father never had the mortification of failing in business. The same is true of my own affairs." So far as ever having failed in business, I do not remember the week or month when every man who worked for me did not get his pay when it was due." The wool-shearing machine business became valueless when the war of 1812 commenced. In this connection it is interesting to note that the principle of these machines was precisely the same as the one now used so largely in reapers and mowing machines. At the termination of the machine business Mr. Cooper bought a twenty years' lease of two houses and six lots of ground, where the "Bible House" now stands, opposite the Cooper Institute. He erected some wooden buildings, and carried on the grocery business for three years. Soon after he purchased a gine factory, between Thirty-first and Thirty-fourth streets, which he carried on for twenty-one years, and then removed the business to Brooklyn, where it is continued at the present time.

In 1828 Mr. Cooper purchased a large lot of land in and about the city of Baltimore, Md., and established the Canton Iron Works. Here he built, in 1830, after his own designs, a locomotive engine which would turn the short and frequent curves in the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. It saved that road from bankruptcy and opened up a new era in railroading. After successfully disposing of the Canton works, Mr. Cooper erected a rolling and saw-mill on Third avenue, New York. He sold these out, and at Trenton, N. J., erected what was at that time the largest rolling mill in this country for the manufacture of railroad iron. Here the first iron beams were rolled, now so much used in fire-proof buildings. The experiment was made at an expense of $75,000, and was attempted while the Cooper Institute was being built, being the intention of the founder to make the building completely fire-proof.
