LIVINGSTON, M. T., OCT. 4, 1893.

It is remarkable that no move has yet been made toward the selection of delegates to represent this county at the constitutional convention. Though the emoluments of the position are nothing, it is to be presumed that there will be no difficulty in finding men willing to represent the people in this emergency. But to find men of the proper discretion, intelligence and experience who will devote their time to this unthankful and unremunerative task may be a more difficult undertaking than would at first sight appear. In a month from to-day the election will be held, and yet there is apparently as little general thought given to the selection of candidates, or, indeed, to the work they are to perform when elected, as if nothing of the kind was in prospect. Though the party leaders in this county are dilatory in moving to that end, the preliminaries will doubtless be arranged and the election conducted through the medium of party machinery. This is by all means commendable. It goes without saying that the delegates should be the best men to be found, and according to the system of politics as operated by parties, those who appear to be in every way most desirable are selected as candidates. Though the county conventions for the respective parties have not yet been called, there is yet time to select tickets, and we may confidently expect that at the election five democrats will oppose five republicans. Were it not for one consideration the most ardent partisan need not give himself trouble as to whether his political friends or opponents were in majority at the convention next winter. That consideration arises from the fact that a majority of the next federal house of representatives will be democratic in sentiment, and should Montana, in the capacity of a democratic territory, knock for admission to the Union, would naturally listen kindly to the application. A portion at least of republican Dakota must soon be granted admission, and it is highly probable if Montana remains with the democracy she too would be admitted to operate as a political balance. Therefore it should be borne in mind that if a majority of the delegates to the constitutional convention are democrats, Montana's chances for statehood are materially increased.
