BATTLE OF TENNIS GIANTS

English Champions to Compete in the Newport Tourney.

DIFFERENT STYLES OF PLAYING

Mahony, Eaves and Nisbet, the Three Stars of the United Kingdom's Tennis World, Who Have Come to This Side to Do Battle With Our Cracks.

The first of the series of international lawn tennis matches played at Longwood, near Boston, last week, marked the beginning of what promises to be the greatest epoch in American lawn tennis history.

This is due to the fact that Great Britain is this year represented by a team of experts far superior to any that has previously come over the water.

The Britons are here to compete for the American as well as the international championship, and as they will meet our players in many tournaments before they return home in the fall the vexed question of supremacy ought to be pretty well settled.

The plans of the British team include the invitation "round robin" match at Longwood this week as well as the Newport championship match.

Mahony, Eaves and Nisbet, the trio of distinguished visitors, are all well known on the other side of the Atlantic as experts of the highest class. Indeed, Mahony and Eaves have reached the topmost rung of ladder of tennis fame on the other side. Mahony was champion of all England—the highest title in all the tennis world—until a few weeks ago, and even after he lost at Wimbledon to young Doherty, of Cambridge, Mahony turned the tables on his conqueror in the England vs. Ireland matches. He has been champion of Ireland at different times, and has held almost every other challenge cup of prominence abroad at one time or another. He and Doherty, Eaves and W. Foadley are still ranked at the top of the heap and all about even.

Eaves holds the same position in British tennis circles as does Larned over here. He is the uncrowned king, whom everyone expects to see win the championship, but who falls at the last moment through some mischance. Eaves was a decided favorite at Wimbledon this season for the British championship, but he was ill at the time he played Doherty, and after a vain struggle for two sets he retired. Eaves now holds the championship of Ireland and a number of other less important challenge cups.

Nisbet is hardly so prominent as the other two, nor is he considered so clever a player. He is a comparative newcomer among the cracks of the British lawn tennis world, and is said to have a brilliant future before him. He is small and brilliant in his play, rather than steady. His defeat of Eaves, many years his senior, and supposed to be decidedly his superior, in last week's matches at Longwood was an instance of his meteoric brilliancy. He and Eaves are both Englishmen, while Mahony is an American, whose home is in Dublin. Eaves is a doctor in one of the hospitals of the London suburb, Mahony is a gentleman of leisure, his family being wealthy, while Nisbet has just left college and is "reading law."

As to personal appearance and characteristics, both Mahony and Nisbet are tall and thin. Each is over six feet, while Eaves is inches shorter and years older

AMERICAN TENNIS PLAYERS.

Whitman is a Harvard College player of erratic brilliancy. At times he shows clever fun, and then his play falls off badly when he meets a man whose game he fears. More experience, however, may develop more steadiness, and then he will have a chance for high honors. Naturally tall and thin, he has a peculiar style of crouching to make most of his strokes. Leo E. Ware, Holcomb Ward, Dwight F. Davis and J. D. Forbes are also among the Harvard contingent, and all are promising for future champions. Ward developed remarkable skill in the Canadian championships this year, but he has been thought to be a "coming man" for several seasons now, and may never get much further. J. Parnley Park, Arthur L. Williston and Clarence R. Budlong are all comparative veterans, and each has reached his limits and will probably never get any higher. Clarence P. Dodge and Richard Hooker, of Yale, however, are both young and promising, and may still be ranked among the champions in future years.

SOCIETY NOTES.

Miss Valentine Lawrence, granddaughter of Mrs. E. D. N. Southwick, was married Thursday last to Mr. Arthur Henriques, of Honolulu. The ceremony, which was private on account of the death of Mr. William J. Lawrence, an uncle of the bride, was performed at the residence of her parents, in Yorkers, N. Y. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Henriques left for Honolulu.

As soon as President McKinley learned of the return of Justice Ambassador and Mrs. Reid he telegraphed an invitation to them to make a visit to himself and Mrs. McKinley at their country retreat on Lake Champlain, beginning Saturday next. Later Mr. Reid will visit Secretary Sherman.

Prof. Gilbert Thompson, of No. 2138 P street, who, with his wife and daughter, Miss Amy Thompson, left for Montana the latter part of June, made their trip to the West delightful by including in their route, Niagara Falls, the Great Lakes and other points of interest along the way.

As Prof. Thompson is in Montana in an official capacity, and a member of the Geological Survey, it is probable that he will stay longer than is comfortable for the summer tourist, but Mrs. Thompson and Miss Amy are determined to remain with him in spite of the fall winds, until they can all return together, later in the autumn.

Among the cottagers who are enjoying the cool, invigorating air at Oakland are Judge Jere Wilson and family, who are at Wilmers; Mr. and Mrs. Talmage Lambert, with Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Lambert, plan, if business duties did not take him out of tennis, as it goes with so many other American tennis players. America has not the leisure class of men that makes England so strong in all forms of sports. Stevens, however, is one notable exception to this, for he is one of the famous family of Hoboken, and has nothing to prevent his developing championship skill except his own limitations. He has never succeeded in learning to volley, however, and the championship can never be won by a baseline player, pure and simple, as he is.

Miss Olive Greene, of No. 12 I street northeast, is visiting her friend, Miss Addie Williams, at her home in St. Augustine, Maryland.

Miss Helen W. Smith, of 1322 V street, is the guest of Miss Lottie Fenwick, of Fairfax, Va.

Mrs. Sophie Willard and her granddaughters, the Misses Sophie, Leonora and Emma Lippard, and Miss Belle Joyce, left yesterday for Rochester, N. Y.

Mrs. E. L. Adley and daughter, of East Washington, spent August with relatives in North and South Carolina.

Mrs. James Carroll and daughter, Miss Mayne Carroll, of No. 947 F street southwest, have returned from an extended trip through Southern Maryland.

The Misses Edwina and Maud Hall, of Bristol, Va., are visiting Miss M. L. Ketcham, of this city. Miss Ketcham will leave during the week for a fortnight's sojourn through New York State, visiting Niagara Falls, Watkins' Glen, and other points of interest.

The Misses Woodbridge, accompanied by their mother, Mrs. I. M. Woodbridge, have gone on a camping expedition to the lower Potomac.

Robberies Reported.

Mrs. A. M. Garrett reports that a pocket-book containing $10 was stolen from her house, No. 1111 Eleventh street, Saturday afternoon.

L. P. Harris, of No. 2146 Florida avenue northwest, reports that a black silk umbrella was stolen from the hallway of his home Saturday night.

C. G. Sandiford reports that his Eclipse bicycle was stolen from in front of his home, No. 1311 G street, on Saturday night.

J. P. McCoy lost a bicycle lamp while returning from River view on Saturday night.

THE HOBOKEN SERIES.

The Two Wrenns and Larned Will Play Against the Englishmen.

New York, Aug. 2.—The international lawn tennis tournament of the St. George Cricket Club will begin tomorrow afternoon at Hoboken. All three of the visiting British experts came back from Boston on Sunday night with Larned and the Wrenn brothers and today was spent in town. Eaves, Mahony, Nisbet, and Wrenn lunched down town, with "Giles" Campbell, and then went over to the grounds in Hoboken to take a look at the courts. During the than the other pair. He is also much stouter and of a much more phlegmatic temperament. Mahony is jolly in disposition, and quite communicative to Americans, to whom he seems to have taken a fancy. Eaves is rather reserved and quiet, while Nisbet is full of dry humor that crops out even in his matches. Both Mahony and Nisbet play with a singular lung lunge, and each has a reach that seems almost like the neck of a giraffe when he stretches out his arm for a ball. Both are clever at backhand play, and Nisbet is famous for his wonderful ability to volley underhand. Eaves, on the other hand, is a natural volleyer, and plays more like the Western champion, Carr Nel, than of the other Americans.

The chief difference noted between the English and American styles of tennis, as exemplified by the visitors and the American experts, is in the method of making the strokes. Americans are more in a hurry to win, and they take larger chances with small openings for a winning shot. The British players keep returning the balls, no matter how difficult the stroke, but are not often so brilliant as Larned, Wrenn and some of the other Amer-
