

FORTHE FARMER.

Vegetables for Next Spring.

While the gardens are filled with abundance, and harvest rather than seed time is suggested by the huge beets, long carrots, and already drooping onions, one is apt to forget that even now, this very September, some of the vegetable seeds should be sown so as to have early greens, cabbages, onions, etc., next Spring. Take a look at the early spinach bed, and notice the fine plants up from seed scattered from the ripened crop. These plants frequently come out bright in the Spring, with no care, and furnish a fine supply of "greens," at a time when the gardener is sowing his ordinary vegetables. It is not advisable to trust to this chance product, but select a spot where an early crop of something has already been gathered, spade in a good coat of manure, rake off the bed and sow with spinach. In one week the plants will be up and will need hoeing and thinning. Upon the approach of cold Winter weather, cover rather lightly, with straw, leaves, evergreen brush, or salt hay, and remove it in April, when the plants will come out bright and fresh, and may be gradually thinned out for the table. In the vicinity of cities, market gardeners sow acres of spinach in this month, for sale during the late Fall, Winter, and early Spring.

Onions may be sown in like manner, during the latter part of August or early in September. The small bulbs will frequently keep over Winter without covering, but it is better to protect them as described for spinach. They are usually left quite thick till Spring, and then transplanted, furnishing onions for the table, a long time in advance of those sown in the Spring. Garlic, for those who like this vegetable, may be treated precisely like the onion.

Cabbages and Cauliflowers require more protection to carry them successfully through the Winter. Prepare the bed and sow the first of September. Cultivate and thin out the plants, so that they will fill all the ground, but not touch each other. When Winter approaches, make a frame, by nailing boards or planks together, of the size of the bed, one foot high on the front or south side, and two feet high on the back, with slanting or beveled ends to compare with the two sides. It is better to have several cross slats upon the top for shutters, or sash to slide up and down upon, after the manner of hot-bed frames. When freezing nights approach, place the frame upon the bed, and cover with boards, shutters, or hot-bed sash. Open them in the morning during pleasant mild days. They should be exposed to the weather as much as possible, when not freezing, so as to harden for severe frosts. When it is evident that Winter is setting in earnest, bank up about the sides, stop any crevices, and cover the top with boards or shutters. If glazed sash are used, boards or shutters should be laid over them, as it is now essential to stop both cold air and light, leaving the plants to Winter in a dormant state. Thus preserved, they will even then probably be frozen, but in the absence of light and sudden changes, the frost will finally come out so gradually as not to injure them. Frequent freezing and thawing is what destroys out-door cabbages. If covered as described, when they once get frozen they remain so for a long time. It may be best, when the mercury sinks quite low, to cover with old mats, straw, or sedge; to further exclude the cold air, and render them less subject to changes of temperature. During a succession of mild days in Winter, the covers may be partially removed to air the plants, and in Spring they should be uncovered at all suitable times to harden off. When settled weather arrives, say about the first of May, transplant to the open grounds, and you will have cabbages and cauliflowers several weeks in advance of those sown in the Spring.

The antiquity of the husbandman's art is certainly not to be contested by any other. The three first men in the world were a gardener, a ploughman, and a grazier; and if any man object, that the second of these was a murderer, I desire he would consider, that as soon as he was so, he quitted our profession, and turned builder. It is for this reason, I suppose, that Ecclesiastical forbids us to hate husbandry; because (says he) the Most High God has created it. We were all born to his art, and taught by nature to nourish our bodies by the same earth out of which they were made, and to which they must return, and pay at last for their sustenance.

Behold the original and primitive nobility of all those great persons who are too proud now, not only to till the ground but almost to tread upon it. We may say what we please of cities, and lions rampant and spread eagles in fields do or do not; if heraldry was guided by reason, a plough in a field arable, would be the most noble and ancient arms.

All these considerations make me fall into the wonder and complaint of Columella, how it should come to pass that all arts and sciences, metaphysics, physics, morality, mathematics, logic, rhetoric, &c., which are all, I grant good and useful faculties, (except only metaphysics, which I do not know whether it be anything or no,) but even fencing, dancing, attiring, cookery, carving, and such like vanities, shall all have public schools and masters; and yet that we should never see or hear of any man who took upon him the profession of teaching this so pleasant, so virtuous, so profitable, so honorable, so necessary art.
