The world will forgive a man for failing but not for quitting.

It is well to remember "the other fellow" is a man, as well as yourself, and he may even be a better one.

For the benefit of a couple of our young ladies—Lambis shouldn't go around looking for wolves—as sometimes happens.

The fact a thing has been done a certain way for twenty years is no proof that a better way cannot be found.

You cannot build a reputation on the things you are going to do.

A cheerful man is the greatest aggravation to a grouch.

One of our most popular young ladies went into a drug store for a bath sponge. In asking for it she made the ludicrous mistake of requesting the clerk to give her a sponge bath. The clerk swooned and his recovery is doubtful. In order to get this item in we promised to mention no names.

He sat in his door at noon, day lonely and glum and sad; the flies were buzzing about him, led by a blue-winged gad; not a customer darkened his portal not a sign of business was there, but the flies kept on buzzing about the old man's hair; at last in misery he shouted: "Great Scott, I'm covered with flies!" and the seelers, that toyed with his whiskers, whispered, "Why don't you advertise?"

A Seattle judge rebuked the district attorney because no cases were ready and the court was idle two days. The district attorney replied that there were no cases to get ready. When asked why, he had to admit that work for the criminal court had fallen off about 50 per cent since the prohibition law went into effect. Of course there were some bootlegging cases. (We mention this to save anyone who is opposed to prohibition the trouble of informing us.) But of crime there was a real dearth. It's dreadful the way prohibition cuts in, to some home industries, including wife-beating, desertion, assault, rape, and murder.

ARE YOU among the thousands of men and women who are carried away by the catalog habit? Is there anyone in your immediate family circle who is allowing this habit to run away with him? If so, there is work for you to do. This habit started more than forty years ago. It is this same habit that has stunted the growth of thousands of communities. It has built up a few enormously large cities at the expense of your town. Don't allow a habit like this to run away with you. Take the bit in your own teeth. Investigate for yourself. Ind out. Talk it over with your home merchant. Get your heads together. That habit is hurting you both. By killing this habit you benefit yourself, your children, your neighbors, your community. Spend your money at home. This includes your printing.

THE MATCHMAKER

By SUSAN E. CLAGETT.

The moon was at its full and the old-fashioned garden at Ellerslie was very beautiful this late September night.

The Shelleys were entertaining the young people of the neighborhood. It was not a dance, merely a supper party and after that the wonderful garden and the tree shadows and the scent of late roses and sentiment.

And it was sentiment indeed. Some of it was very earnest. A good deal of it was play, but so well played that more frequently than not it ended in a game of cross purposes that threatened serious consequences.

It was in such a play that Warren Addison and Nell Lehart were the principal actors. The other boy and girl were only accessories. They did not know it.

Warren had come from Baltimore to meet her here. She was late in arriving. When she did appear it was with a man he did not know. The man and her lateness—in Warren's mind an intentional thing—made him turn to the first pretty girl in that garden of southern prettiness.

If they had known a little more of life the two foolish things would not have had an unhappy moment, but she was seventeen and Warren not quite twenty-one. She cried herself to sleep that night and Warren took the early train for Baltimore. Neither had spoken ten words to the other.

Uncle Charles was a matchmaker. He would have resented this if anyone had had the assurance to declare it, for his matchmaking extended no further than his favorite niece and "that boy," as he called Warren Addison. He had done everything in his power to further a marriage that was violently opposed by the girl's father; had even promised to help them when they were ready to set up housekeeping.

This home looked farther away than ever after that evening at Ellerslie. Warren had not been in the country since then and Uncle Charles could not understand this. He questioned Nell, but could get nothing from her save a shrug and a toss of her head. If Warren didn't care to come and was tired of writing, she wasn't going to worry herself about it, she declared.

He had not suspected the trouble had gone so far as that. He must do something to circumvent a ruthless fate. But what?

He talked the matter over with Aunt Mary. She was interested, but advised not to meddle. That was exactly what he had made up his mind to do, however, and the best way to do it, he decided, was to have a house party of his own.

Very much pleased with himself, he went to church the next morning and after service called two or three of the young men to him. Telling them of his intention, he was soon the center of a fluttering group of femininity—all delighted with the prospect of a week of gaiety.

And Uncle Charles did not make them wait for their pleasure. The next evening found the gay crowd in his home.

Nell and Warren were to all appearances the gayest of the company, but those who knew them well felt there was something wrong between them, possibly revealed by the extreme politeness of the one to the other.

When two days had passed, and then a week, and Uncle Charles saw no prospect of a settlement of their quarrel, he decided upon his final scheme, a ride to Annapolis—twenty-seven miles away—dinner there and a return home by moonlight. He thought Nell a horsewoman. She was not.

She was a coward about horses, but stronger than her cowardice was her pride, and she started with the others, her heart in her throat and clutching at the pommel whenever she thought the action would pass unnoticed. Her escort was on a newly-broken colt that claimed all his attention and whose antics, at last, made every horse in the party restive. There was no surprise felt when he bolted and started a stampede down the narrow country road.

Nell was the only one incapable of managing her horse. She tried, but fright overcame her and the reins dropped. As they fell from her hand the horse shied and she lay—a trampled little heap by the roadside.

A year later, the scene was again laid in the garden at Ellerslie. Under one of the trees sat a boy and a girl. They had been very quiet and the thought of that other night was in the minds of both. Presently Warren spoke.

"Nell, Nell, to think how near we came to missing this."

She leaned a little toward him and her voice was low as she answered: "I do not think we would have missed it, dear. I could have stood it no longer. I hoped you would speak. If not, love was more to me than pride and I would have told you on that ride to Annapolis."

He laughed a little. "And I? Well, I was waiting my opportunity when your horse shied. After that nothing mattered."

He gave a quick glance backward. No one was in sight and he leaned over and touched her lips.

Which goes to show that Uncle Charles had keener insight into the ways of lovers than had been credited to him. (Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
