Saul is the first recorded suicide; but ever since his desperate end the catalogue has assumed a grim protractedness wor-thy of Dante. It is curious to recollect how comparatively modern and how completely Western is its estimation as a crime. Not a word in Old Testament history condemns it. In Hindoostan "suttee" still obtains, nor is the "happy repagnance, but who was itnessing it into an earnest re is built and kept burner thirty hours before cretake place. Wretchedness nothing can be seen and death claim both our sympathy and and nothing can be seen and death claim both our sympathy and respect, and thus it comes to pass that, whatever our abstract view may be such a strange conjunction of the two main realization or sublima- human ills will always evoke the pity of frail mortality. Ophelia and Othello, alike in nothing but their suicide, are

> MANY KINDS OF SUICIDES That they can hardly be ranked together. That they can hardly be ranked together. The irresponsible mind, unhinged either by physical or so-called mental causes, the victim whelmed by "the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune," the betrayed girl or beggared gambler, goaded to desperation, the man wantonly reckless of life, the martyr for a cause where "Faith unfaithful keeps him falsely true," the remorseless perpetrator of some wrong or another, all differ so widely in everything but their end as to deserve a everything but their end as to deserve a separate nomenclature. Nor is it irrelevant or irreverent to imagine a case where the sanctity of existence is more than outweighed by unmerited agony. Some poor, baffled, starving wretch, who has none to need or mourn him, who has strained every nerve in vain for work, the victim of "over-population," of "society," of what you will, may well argue, like poor Josephs in "Never Too Late to Mend," that the future cannot be as bad as the present. Apart from the religious side of the question, ITS MORAL ASPECT Mainly depends on the cowardice of an act that is the last luxury of the luckless; and cowardice, where none depend on are left in the rosy light | the suicide, there can be none. it sees nothing but those markable, if we bear these considerations rumbling away into dust in mind, that in the ever increasing touch of an invisible strain of work and competition, and the only appearance to the eye growing artificiality of civilization, sui-eor of the northern lights cide has not increased more than it has Madness is far more prevalent, and madness is the nurse of suicide. A note-worthy fact with regard to suicide is its epidemic character. In the year 1506 no fewer than sixty persons perished by their own hand in Rouen, and in 1783 100 destroyed themselves at Versailles. Periods of convulsion and agitation, which unnaturally excite, often abnorhas gone to mingle with the mally extinguish fine and sensitive minds, and, as if an acorn planted in porcelain, it will soon break the pot. The the earth have been escaped, "Werther" craze was fruitful in suicide, and Goethe had to defend himself from a possible dissecting an imputed possibility. The many sad hour,' which, in- suicides of late years on the railroads at

> OUR LIST OF SUICIDES Comprises, roughly, the ruined, the heroic and the reckless. Of the ruined it would be commonplace to speak. History and fiction abound in examples, and both are united in the person of Chatter-ton. Suicide is, indeed, the very shroud of failure, and, as failure is always matic, it is on this side of its interest that the modern French drama has so vividly seized. Not that, like the ancient statu esque Greek tragedy, the suicide is wont to occur silently and off the stage. Sarah Bernhardt and Croizett poison themselve vehemently, almost voraciously, and such denouements are rendered both psychically and physically sensational. less is it necessary-here to discuss the he-roic suicides that we have enumerated as one of several distinct subdivisions. Cato and Seneca are typical instances, and there has even been a mock-heroic suicide, that of Vatel, the chivalrous chief, who killed himself in honorable despair because enough fish was not duly supplied to the royal tables, and was ele-gized and eulogized by Boileau. But the suicide who recklessly disregards his life is a rarer and more fascinating study; the voluptuary and the hypochondrist will occasionally thus end their days, and the famous story of the "Suicide Club" com memorates how an association of such callous sybarites would meet at periodical banquets, each of which was by some poisoned viand destined to end the life of one of them, that one being kept in ignorance of his doom-London Globe.

"What is Life?"

Some one asked Muntford. His anover is taken off the gas with oil entering the gas written: 'The present life is sleeping and waking, it is a good-night on going to and waking, it is a good-night on going to bed, and good-morning on getting up; it is to wonder what the day will bring forth; it is to rain on the window when one sits by the fire; it is to walk in the garden and see the flowers and hear the birds sing; it is to hear news from the cast, west, north and south; it is to see piech the sand new books; it is to see piech the sand new books; it is to see piech the sand new books; it is to see piech the sand new books; it is to see piech the sand new books; it is to see piech the sand new books; it is to see piech the sand seed and see the flowers and hear the birds and new books; it is to see piech the sand seed and tures and hear music; it is to have Sundangerous fluid that it lighted match can be lighted match can be done this can be done the can be done the can be done the can be done to be come one of a consistence of acquisitances; it is to have tures and hear music; it is to have Sun s that the conditions circle of acquaintances; it is to have iriends and love; it is to have sight of dear old faces; and it is to know themdefective lamp, or with selves thought of many times a day, in many places, by many children and grandchildren and friends."
