CHICAGO CONVENTION.

The Report of the Proceedings of Friday and Saturday.

How the Nominations Were Made and by Whom.

A Great Deal of Nothing.

FRIDAY NIGHT'S PROCEEDINGS.

Chicago, 4.—The question returned on the adoption of the majority report in the case of the First District of Illinois, on which the roll was called, resulting, yeas 284, nays 256, so the majority report was adopted.

The question recurring on the adoption of the majority report in the case of each contested district. The chair stated the question to be the first district in the Illinois Third District, and the roll was called, resulting, yeas 285, nays 255, so the report was adopted.

A motion to adjourn till 11 o'clock was made by a delegate from Mississippi, and was lost.

Meantime Conkling and others had been laboring with Logan, who withdrew his demand for any further division of the question regarding the remaining Illinois contests.

A call of roll was had on the Fourth District, resulting yeas 283, nays 257, so the report was adopted.

The majority report, so far as relates to the remaining Illinois contests, was then adopted by a vote of yeas.

On motion of Sewell, of New Jersey, the convention adjourned to 11 o'clock Saturday morning.

ATLANTA'S PROCEEDINGS.

Chicago, 5.—Congress stated that the committee were nearly equally divided in this case, and rather indicated that he was not himself clear in opinion as to the true merits of the case.

After considerable cross-talking between different delegates as to facts of purely local interest, Haymond, of California, said that whichever way the convention voted in this case, that vote would sustain the principle of district representation.

Each side here claims to be district representation, and the question is as to whether district or outlying delegates were legally chosen representatives of the districts involved.

The vote was taken by a call of states upon substituting the minority for the majority report, and it was carried. Then the convention voted new votes to be sent to the contestants.

The Grant, Sherman and Edmunds men appeared to combine on the affirmative vote.

The next case of contest considered was that of Utah, and debate was limited to thirty minutes. The majority report was adopted, and the majority of the committee say were appointed according to almost universal usage in Utah, by the central republican committee, while contestants were chosen by an unauthorized and irregular body.

Haymond, of a Florida, sustained the majority report, and stated that the action of the central committee was irregular. Disqualified representatives without any authority met together and elected the two contestants. The committee on credentials was almost unanimous in favor of the sitting delegates.

Codman, of Massachusetts, was in favor of the contestants. The majority of the committee, following the majority report, and it could not be heard by the reporter.

Mulder, (Boston) one of the Utah contestants, having got leave to be heard in his own case, appeared for recognition as a representative of the "anti-Blaime men" of Utah. He argued that he had been chosen by a convention representing twelve of twenty counties in the territory, the other eight counties being polled about six votes in opposition to Morrison.

A colored delegate from Mississippi desired to know whether the contestants or sitting delegates represented Brigham Young Mormon.

Houch, of Tennessee, tried to be heard, but as the time for debate had expired, he was interrupted by loud calls of question, which interrupted him, and he was not heard.

He was greatly excited, and persisted in what appeared to be a denunciation of those who were interrupting him, until a storm of hisses drowned his utterances.

The roll of states was then called on the motion to substitute the minority for the majority report, and this case the Utah contestants, resulting, yeas 435, nays 212, so the minority report was substituted.

The vote was in no sense a test of the strength of the respective factions, the partisans of different candidates dividing. The convention then admitted the Utah contestants.

Witnessed a scene which would be photographed in the history of the Chicago Convention, of Kentucky rising on his seat and protesting against his vote being counted in a way which they had no right to do.

Let it be the unit rule or let it be an individual rule and let it be the same for all delegates, or let it be the same for all delegates, or let it be the same for all delegates.

In answer to the question by Frye, of Maine, Garfield said that without the adoption of the rules there would be no previous question in the convention and no consent in any way disposing of a ballot after the first ballot should have been taken.

Conkling made some reply to Frye which could not be heard at the desks. Sharpe replied, urging that the dangers of trouble pointed out by Garfield in his answer to Frye were mere imaginary and intimated distinctly that there would be an attempt to prevent the delegates expressing their individual sentiments, through the chairman of his delegation.

In answer to the question by Frye, of Maine, Garfield said that without the adoption of the rules there would be no previous question in the convention and no consent in any way disposing of a ballot after the first ballot should have been taken.

Garfield said the convention had wasted on his vote time enough to have adopted the rules and gone to work. He said the rules could not be taken without further debate.

Sharpe moved to substitute the majority report for the minority report by adding to amend the following: That the committee shall within the next twelve months prescribe a method or methods for the selection of delegates to the national convention to be held in 1884, and announce the same to the country, and leave a call for that convention to the delegates to be elected.

Butterfield, of Ohio, moved an amendment to the amendment by adding the following: That nothing in such rule or method shall be construed as to prevent the several districts in the United States from selecting their delegates to the national convention.

Garfield hoped the amendment would be adopted, and it was so adopted by the convention, and then the rules were adopted, and the convention adjourned.

On motion of Garfield, the committee on resolutions were ordered to report. The report, reporting the resolutions, said: "We need hardly say that in a committee composed of one from each state in the Union, one from each territory, and one from each of the following: Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia, there was a great diversity of opinion about the question of the resolutions to be adopted in the convention."

The resolutions having been read by the committee, they were then adopted, and the convention adjourned.

The republican party, adhering to the principle affirmed by its last national convention of respect for constitutional rights governing appointment to office, proposed that the resolutions be amended to read: "That the power of removal for cause should be vested in the president, and that the power of removal for cause should be vested in the president."

Parker briefly supported his proposition. The resolutions were then adopted, and the convention adjourned.

Finian, of Texas, said his state had had enough of the civil service. They had had enough of the civil service. They had had enough of the civil service.

What are we here for except to get the civil service out of our system? We are here for except to get the civil service out of our system.

Warner, of Alabama, moved to strike out the sentence in Parker's amendment which re-entails the tenure of office law.

able to agree, Conkling moved that the national committee should fill the vacancy.

Conkling objected. The chair ruled the motion in order, and it was adopted.

Drake, of Minnesota, offered the following resolutions: That in case of the death or resignation of any member of the national committee, the vacancy may be filled by the appointment by the central committee of the state territory or district.

Hale, of Maine, moved the call of roll of states, which was agreed to and over a state is reached which has a nomination to present, it may be presented under the rules as adopted.

Logan inquired how the delegates were allowed to second nominations.

The chair said the rule made no provision for delegates seconding nominations, but allowed ten minutes for the nomination of each candidate.

Conkling asked unanimous consent that five minutes may be given for the seconding of each nomination immediately after the nomination, and it was so ordered.

Hale's motion was then agreed to and the roll was called.

When Michigan was called, James F. Joy rose and took the platform, wearing a green sash, and after some reference to the public life of his proposed nominee, he presented the name of William W. Windom, James G. Blaine.

The nomination of Blaine was not inspiring in its delivery, and the demonstrations of applause which followed were attributed to his subject alone.

When New York was called Conkling rose and mounted the reporter's table. He too was received with loud and continued applause, though not such general or apparently spontaneous cheering.

Conkling spoke with great distinction in clear tones and in his usually impressive manner. His mention of the name of Grant, and his allusion to the "old hero" in clear tones and in his usually impressive manner.
