THE NEW YORK SUN has a peculiar way of its own of "hitting nails on the head and sticking them home." An instance in illustration is that telegraphed yesterday, wherein the Sun congratulates the civilized world that the available services of Judge Field on the Supreme Court are likely to be secured for four years longer.

If the Cincinnati convention shall continue as it has begun, and work as expeditiously to-day as it did yesterday, we may expect the completion of its labors before daylight. The credentials committee has little to do, the work of effecting a permanent organization will be brief, the adoption of the platform can occupy but a short time, when will come the nominations for president, and the balloting.

For president, Samuel J. Tilden, of New York.
For vice president, Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana.

WHEN SAMUEL J. TILDEN'S name was mentioned by the president of the Cincinnati convention, yesterday, the enthusiasm was unbounded. Delegates stood upon their seats, waved their handkerchiefs and face and cheered lustily. It was not a pro-coerced arrangement that Judge Hendricks should speak of Tilden, and that the members of the convention should shout and clap their hands at the mention of the old man's name. The whole proceeding was impromptu and happily showed how deeply the party respected the gentleman.

As a political cartoonist Th. Nast, of Harper's Weekly is getting to be a good deal of a failure. The Graphic man double discounts him, and Kupper, of Peck, is a bigger man than Nast ever was in the cartoon line. It is seldom that anything really good from the famous Heston makes its appearance in Harper's lately, and, indeed, Nast doesn't seem to know when he makes a point well. For instance, the best thing he has had recently is contained in the last number of the Weekly, and is tucked in an out-of-the-way corner, as if it were of little account.

THE same delightful harmony that has characterized the state democratic conventions throughout the Union this year, seems to prevail in the national gathering of the party at Cincinnati. The meeting yesterday went as "smooth as oil," everybody apparently knowing his place, just what was to be done and who was to do it. The only exception was when that chronic disturber of the peace, John Kelly, of New York, undertook to break the harmony; but he was promptly squelched on that, to say properly heard, the convention plainly showing that it wanted none of his unwise counsel, nor his dissenting band of followers. In this peaceful feature of the democratic meetings of 1880 can be maintained throughout the convention a great point in favor of the party will be gained. If the platform can be adopted and the nominations made without one of the long and disgraceful struggles that are so general in similar gatherings, the country will see that the democracy is united as it has not been before for years. This fact will give it great strength, and go far towards helping it to success. Discussion has hurt the party, more or less, for the past twenty years. Indeed, until now, it has not been firmly united since the historical split of 1850. Now all factions are seemingly reconciled, and for once the democrats are in a position to work together for the success and the re-establishment in power of the grand old principles of government which alone have the right to prevail on American soil. With good nominations at Cincinnati and harmonious labors throughout the country, the democrats are certain to achieve victory next fall. It will then remain for them to stand loyally by their principles and give the country honest, just and good government, when their lease of power must be perpetual.

THE Splendid Man of California.
New York, 22.—Frank M. Pixley, now here, told a reporter today that Blaine would be nominated for the presidency on the next ballot, except for the backing of Hale and Fry, Blaine's managers. Iowa and Maine were Blaine's bulwarks, and they remained firm. The break would have followed on the next ballot from the Grant men. Pixley is sure of this, and gives his authority for the statement no less a person than Senator Cameron. He also declares that Arthur was not Conkling's candidate, and that Conkling really opposed him. Pixley regards the ticket as a strong one, and believes it will carry the Pacific states. Arthur's nomination was a surprise to him, but he knows he is a splendid man.
