POLITICAL.

The Republican Idea of Democracy in New York.

New York, 3.—The Times, on the democratic fusion here, says: In nearly all the assembly districts there is just without doubt, a hostile feeling among democrats, notwithstanding the Westminster Hall lottery, and it is believed there will be many independent candidates in the fall. Tammany people in the First and Second Districts declare they will not submit to the results of the lottery, but run their own candidates. The prospect of power and harmony notwithstanding the smiles of John Keogh and Hubert O. Thompson, is beginning to fade rapidly away.

The Herald's predictions of democratic success in the state, as the result of the fusion, are too sanguine. It is too confidently assumed that when the party is united New York is necessarily a democratic state. At the last election all the democratic state candidates, whom there was no division of the party, were defeated, with one exception. While the recent democratic reconciliation improves the democratic prospect, it does not take New York out of the list of doubtful states.
