THE PRESIDENT is already sending nominations into the Senate, a number of land officers having gone in yesterday. As all seems to be peace and quiet in the Utah official ranks, it is not likely that any of our f. o. h.'s will be disturbed during the winter.

ONE HUNDRED and seventy-four members of the present Congress who were candidates for the Forty-eighth were defeated in the nominating conventions or at the polls. As many of them never expect to return to Congress after this session, they can afford to be independent, and do right.

A BILL has been presented in the Vermont legislature providing for the punishment of manufacturers and vendors of cigarettes. The promoter of the measure says: "I did not include the various forms of tobacco that so long have been, and are likely so long to be, tolerated by considerate people, but sought only to protect an unfortunate imbecile class, for no one except a predestined, foreordained fool would ever smoke a cigarette."

THE GOVERNOR of Missouri has joined the crowd of "previous" ones in regard to the next President. Last week he received an application for the appointment of a commissioner of deeds of Missouri, at Buffalo, N. Y. The recommendation was signed, among others, by Grover Cleveland, and the Missouri governor endorsed it: "Issue commission upon the recommendation of the next President."

THE OTHER day, in the Washington criminal court, Judge Wylie overruled a motion for a new trial of a man convicted of assault with intent to kill, the motion being made on the ground of insanity. The judge said: "There are getting to be so many insane people in the community that the law must take hold of them, and I give notice now to all crazy people who are intent on crime that I will send them all to the penitentiary on conviction." The law-abiding portion of the public will heartily applaud the sentiments of Judge Wylie, and encourage other judges to fall into the same way of thinking and acting as his honor. The man would be very crazy who could commit a crime if he knew the gallows or penitentiary would certainly be his fate. Gulton would never have shot Garfield had he realized that hanging would follow the murder, and yet he was no more crazy on the morning of July 2, 1881, than he was on June 30th, 1882, when he made the fatal drop. Gulton's crime has hurt the "humanity dodge" a good deal, but it has not quite destroyed it. A few such judges as Wylie will return a good many cranks to their reason. A man who commits a crime can appreciate punishment, and understand the meaning of restraint.

Mr. JACOB REESE is credited with having expressed the belief that if it were possible to produce a flameless combustion the intensity and quantity of heat obtained from a given amount of fuel would be greatly increased thereby. Mr. Thomas Fletcher, of Warrington, England, has succeeded in producing a combustion without flame, and lately gave at Owens College a striking practical illustration of Mr. Reese's theory. He directed the flame of a simple gas blowpipe upon a three inch ball of iron wire for a few seconds, and then blew out the flame. The heat rapidly increased and the wire quickly melted and ran into drops. He even succeeded in fusing refractory fire clay, the intensity of heat being much greater than ever before obtained with the fuel used. Even in the dark the burning of the gas was shown to be entirely invisible. It appears that flame really indicates an imperfect combustion.

NEW YORK'S new penal code, which has just gone into effect, seems to be one of the best codes ever adopted. Among its provisions are these: intoxication cannot be pleaded in defense of crime; bribery of a state official is punishable by ten years in the penitentiary and $5,000 fine; jurors accepting bribes must go to prison; bribery of a witness a felony; attempts at suicide punishable by two years' imprisonment and a fine of $1,000; abandonment by parents of children under six years of age punishable by seven years' imprisonment. There are many such wise provisions, and the range of penalties is much higher than in most codes.

GIRLS WHO WHISTLE.

Somebody who was afflicted with a sister who persisted in whistling sent the following note to the New York Sun:

To the Editor of the Sun—Sir: My sister whistles. Should I break her of it? If so, how? Will it do her any harm? Ought a girl to whistle? Do a good many girls whistle? She says they do.

The editor, to whose lot the letter fell, went to Dr. F. H. Hamilton for information in regard to the subject, and Dr. Hamilton said he knew of no difference between the vocal chords, bronchial tubes or lungs of women, and those of men that should make the young man's sister necessarily a poorer whistler than the young man himself. He didn't see any reason why a woman shouldn't be even a better whistler than some men if she gave her whole mind to it. As to whether they did whistle or not, he declined to be considered an authority; and as to why they didn't, or couldn't, or shouldn't, or wouldn't, he modestly affirmed that he was not a sufficient philosopher to determine, and that he would prefer to leave it to somebody else.

Dr. A. B. Mott said: "Why, of course, plenty of women whistle. Quite enough of them, I should think. Don't you know that old French proverb that 'a dancing parson, a crowing hen, and a whistling girl, never come to any good?' But it is all a matter of habit and association in youth. I very much doubt if any girl that is reared in a family without boys about the house ever learns to whistle. On the other hand, a girl with brothers, particularly if they are older than herself, will be very likely to pick it up. But when she gets to be a young woman she will give it up—simply because it isn't regarded as a very lady-like accomplishment. I say 'she will,' when perhaps I should say, 'I suppose she will.' At all events she will be shy of letting young men hear her whistle. There is no physical reason why a girl should not whistle as well as a boy, not at least until she begins squeezing herself short of breath with corsets. And it would be better for her health if she did do more loud-noise making, even whistling, than she is accustomed to."

Dr. Simpson W. Roof said: "Well, while I cannot say that I have overheard a girl emulate a boy's proudest achievement, which is to jam his two fore-fingers into his mouth until he gets a good hold on his back teeth, or somewhere, and then let off an expiring note that would shame a steam whistle, still I have heard a good many girls whistle quite nicely. I don't see why they shouldn't, from any hygienic or physiological reason, anyway. It might be a good thing for them to whistle. One great consideration would be that while they were whistling they couldn't be talking. Perhaps that is the reason they are not often heard whistling. But if you happen to be about when they think themselves alone, you will very often hear them whistling. I think girls in the country whistle more than those in the city, that is, they do so more generally. But the popular prejudice against it is such that women, as a rule, pretend it would be impossible for them to whistle. Lots of men would be surprised to know how well their wives can whistle."

A lady who was asked about it, said frankly, "If you won't expose me, I'll prove to you that one woman you know can whistle. And I'll tell you why women don't whistle usually where men are. Their lips don't look pretty when puffed up for a whistle, and they can't, when whistling, smile to show their teeth, if they have a fine set. Surely those are reasons sufficient why women don't want to whistle, or at least to have men catch them at it. And yet it is a good thing. You have got to use a good deal of lung power to get out a clear, fine whistle, and the more you use the more you will have. Do I know any society ladies who whistle privately? Why, yes, a few of them. Tell you who they are? No, indeed. What would become of us women if we went telling things about each other?"

This powder never varies; a marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER Co New York.
