THE CRIMINALS in the southern Illinois penitentiary furnish a most convincing argument in favor of temperance. There are 500 of them and 115 were drunk at the time their crimes were committed.

A CANADIAN newspaper got off a joke about "indestructible chicken becoming a feature of Canadian refreshment rooms," and people all over the Dominion are waiting to see who will seize it as the text for a five column leader on "The Decadence of Dominion Journalism."

AS ILLUSTRATING the kind of man Colorado sends to the United States Senate in the person of Bowen, it is said his cigar bill at Denver during the senatorial contest, was $800, and his laundry bill seventy cents. It may be imagined from this that Senator Bowen will be in favor of reducing the tax on cigars, while he votes to keep soap off the free list.

THEY ARE telling in Washington a story that is rather hard on the new Colorado senator, Tabor. It is that Tabor agreed with Bowen, who was elected a United States senator for the full term beginning on March 4th next, that he would foot the bill for both if Bowen would take the short term and give him the long one. Under this arrangement Bowen turned in all his bills to Tabor, who paid them without hesitation. The combined expenses of the two amounted to $120,000. Somehow the legislature "mixed them babies up," and Tabor got the short and Bowen the long term.

IT WAS not exactly a democratic me that his townsmen, of Del Norte, Colorado, extended to Senator-elect Bowen, upon his return home from Denver. Riding from the railway station in a coach drawn by six horses, plumed and bedecked as if for a festival, the millionaire rattled up the main street in the rear of the Del Norte Fire Department and a cavalcade of mounted men. "Bells were rung, flags unfurled and anvils and giant powder were shot off." Having shot off the anvils, the town then did the same with champagne bottles and so on.

GERMANY is becoming alarmed over the number of her educated and professional men, and has issued a circular advising young men against taking up law as a profession. The number of students in the universities has increased from 15,130 in 1872 to 23,834 in 1882, and as soon as they graduate the much greater proportion hasten into the learned professions. The wise statesmen think they see in this tendency a danger to trade, commerce and the material interests of the country; hence the circular warning against the law. There is wisdom in the suggestion. Even in America, where the people are not nearly so well educated as in Germany, some of the professions are crowded, and especially that of the law. The idea that "there is room at the top" doubtless leads so many to attempt the ascent; but it would be far better for a few of them if they would retire from the contest and devote their energies to the achievement of success in other and more promising fields.

THE ENGLISH officials and detectives, with characteristic slowness, skill and determination, have followed the Cavendish and Burke assassination cases for nine months, and at last have woven what appears to be a pretty close net about the murderers. Either a good deal of the rankest kind of perjury is being committed, or the perpetrators of that most cruel butchery have been caught, and are in a fair way to end their bloody careers upon the scaffold. The crime was so expert in its conception and execution, that the officials were at first completely nonplussed, having no clue to follow and not knowing in which direction to turn for a hint as to the identity of the criminals. Necessarily many random shots must be fired in the hope of starting the game into discovery. Perhaps one thousand persons have been "spotted" in connection with the Phoenix Park murders, and more than one hundred arrests have been made. Some of these were doubtless made as "blinds," to put the real criminals off their guard until the chain of evidence against them could be made complete. Finally diligence and shrewdness have been rewarded by success, and the officials are entitled to the plaudits, not only of the English, but of the law-and-order loving and law-abiding Irish themselves. The murders were most unfortunate for the Irish people as a whole, for while only a few were guilty directly or indirectly, the country was in such a disturbed and turbulent state, that all necessarily suffered. Now that the butchers have been caught, their prompt conviction and early execution will, or should, at least, have a good effect upon Irish affairs, and do much towards checking crime in the unhappy island.

AN EFFORT is to be made to organize a new political party to embrace all that is good and honest in the old organizations, and include none of the evil, either men or principles. Circulars are issued, calling a convention to meet in Chicago, on July 4th, of this year, which shows the party is to be patriotic as well as pure. Those who are invited to take part in the affair are the men who favor the restriction of the power of corporations, the suppression of gambling in the necessities of life and of combinations which fix prices against the natural laws of trade, the overthrow of all monopolies and the repeal of laws made in the interest of the few against the many, the holding of public lands for actual settlers, and the destruction of vested rights in legal wrongs. Persons are invited to join the movement who oppose the control of the currency by banks of issue; who oppose the taxation of any industry for the benefit of favored enterprise under the guise of a protective tariff; who favor the election of a President, vice-President and United States senators by the direct vote of the people; and all who favor simple and just government as against the complex and corrupt system into which the republic is fast drifting. One might think that all would gladly accept the opportunity for becoming a member of a party such as indicated, but it may be doubted if the convention will contain enough representatives to carry a ward primary.

PROFESSOR WIGGINS, the ex-weather prophet, now excuses the failure of his storm on the ground of a miscalculation, not as to the event, but in the matter of location. Instead of descending upon the United States, he says the storm came at the appointed time upon the Pacific. The "crawl-out" is a moderately fair one, but it shows that Wiggins' capabilities are not as good as they might be. Now, if he had located his storm in the Arctic region, we all must have believed in him as a weather prophet, because of the universal inability to disprove the correctness of his prediction. As the March 11th storm has been withdrawn or postponed, there will now be no chance for the professor to adopt our suggestion and locate it at some place where nobody can say it did not come.

OSCAR WILDE told a London newspaper reporter that "The average American is narrow-minded and ignorant; a magnificent liar, resembling the English in all their bad points, but none of their good ones; having no respect, and utterly wanting in veneration." This is too awfully too too, after we made Oscar rich.
