THE FIRST WIFE.

MR. TABOR'S PIONEER LIFE AND STRANGE MATRIMONIAL EXPERIENCE—THE SECRET MARRIAGE.

Senator Tabor has had a remarkable matrimonial experience, and its sensational denouement only recently gave a great deal of material to the public tongue. He married in Maine when a young man, and in 1856 was seized with the Pike's Peak fever and went to Colorado in a prairie schooner accompanied by his bride, who shared the perils and exposure of that long and tedious journey. They camped for a while at the present site of Denver, which was then a bleak prairie, where he kept a sort of ration-house and supply store, in which Mrs. Tabor precipitated as his chief assistant and cashier to the establishment.

He then moved on to Pike's Peak, joining the innumerable caravan in search for gold. He settled in Colorado city, which is now a town of deserted shanties at the base of the mountain. He there opened a supply store, which his wife kept while he mined the prospectors in the gulches of the mountains hunting for treasures.

When the Pike's Peak excitement died out, Tabor took up the line of march and went over the mountains, following the prospectors, his wife driving the team of mules, and he another. After twenty years of drifting about from one mining camp to another, enduring all sorts of hardships, and sometimes threatened with starvation, he settled down in a log cabin near the present site of Leadville, where he kept a store and boarding-house for miners, his wife acting as cook, clerk and postmistress for the camp. Tabor's cabin was a famous resort in those days, and was the scene of many incidents that are now a part of the history of mining life in the Rocky mountains.

Mrs. Tabor was a sort of "daughter of the regiment" among the miners, being the only woman for miles around, and possessing the confidence and regard of everybody. She was a sort of bank of deposit for the rusty old fellows who did not spend their dust as fast as they washed it out, and it is said that she often carried many thousands of dollars in gold dust in her bosom wrapped in little buckskin bags with the names of the owners attached. During all this time, and up to 1875, her husband was a prospector meeting with little or no luck, while she kept the wolf from the door selling supplies, keeping boarders, and acting as landlady in general for the camp at Carbine Hill.

Good luck came at last, and a fortunate strike made Tabor one of the wealthiest men in the west. His mine was one of the first in the famous group in the Carbonate Hill, and he soon became the possessor of others quite as rich from which he has taken millions of dollars. He now owns in Leadville and other portions of Colorado more productive mining property than any other man, and from some of his mines his income is as high as $50,000 a month. Others pay nearly as much, and it is estimated that his annual income from his mining property cannot be less than $500,000, and his entire fortune is estimated as high as $10,000,000. He has used his money in buying real estate in Denver, and erecting on it the handsomest business blocks west of the Mississippi.

His opera house, which cost $750,000, is no doubt the finest in this country, and is surpassed in its appointments by few in the entire world. His residence in Denver is one of the most conspicuous and costly in that city, and it is one of the sights for tourists who visit his buildings as a sample of western enterprise.

Several months ago Senator Tabor, having tired of the companion of his poverty and humble life, endeavored to secure a divorce from her in one of the back counties of Colorado, using methods which the papers of Denver claim were not strictly honorable. Mrs. Tabor went into court and asked for a division of the property and a separate maintenance. As a compromise her husband offered her $250,000 and his residence in Denver, providing she would consent to the divorce. This she refused to do for some time, but finally the divorce was granted on terms that were much more advantageous to her, and appeared to be satisfactory to him. This family difficulty affected his candidacy for the United States senate very seriously, occurring as it did during the canvass before the legislature and he was compelled to content himself with a short term of thirty days in that distinguished body, but secured the title of senator, and now has honorable written before his name.

THE WELL KEPT SECRET OF HIS MARRIAGE IN ST. LOUIS.

St. Louis Republican.—"What a pious fraud that marriage of Senator Tabor was, the other day," remarked a gentleman yesterday to a reporter. "What do you mean by that?" "Well, I mean just this, and as you are a newspaper man I don't see why you couldn't get up something on the subject that would interest not only St. Louis but the whole country. I mean that there was no occasion whatever for Washington society to make such a great bustle about a man's getting married to his own wife. It was a great confidence game the Colorado millionaire and his wife played upon the Washington folks and the country at large—that's just what it was. Why, the bride on that occasion had been Mrs. Tabor for five months.

"Nonsense; they won't play such a huge joke as that!" "Nonsense, is it? Well, the one of it is right in this city, and what's more, the marriage occurred here. Now, if you will just walk over to the office of the recorder, and will examine the record of marriage licenses for the 30th of last September, you will be cured of your scepticism. They were married here, and what's more, an ex-United States District Attorney managed the whole affair and witnessed the ceremony. It occurred, I understand, at his house, and I believe the priest who married them received a powerful fee."

"Who is the attorney? There's no stopping there after telling half the secrets."

"I'd have told you if I knew, but I don't. I have half a notion it was Mr. Patrick. I've told you all I know."

It is needless to explain that this "pointer," given in such a cold-blooded, careless sort of a way, was followed up with industry and avidity in striking contrast with the manner of its introduction.

A trip was made to the recorder's office and the marriage license record for the period mentioned was procured. Under date of September 30 the following entry was found:

"H. A. W. Tabor, of Colorado, over twenty-one years, to Elizabeth B. McCourt, of Wisconsin, over the age of eighteen years."

The record went on to show that on that same date the persons mentioned were married by Justice John M. Young, of St. Louis. Yet these same persons were married in state by a priest at Willard's Hotel, in Washington, only last Thursday and the public there and everywhere were led to suppose that it was a genuine, original matrimonial event.
