WORKMEN engaged in painting Trinity church in Newport, R. I., last week, took down the vane which was placed on the spire in Queen Anne's reign. It was six feet four inches across and four feet high, and surmounted by a crown, which is believed to be the largest vestige of regal rule in America.

OUR DISPATCHES this morning tell of one Irish paper that dares counsel the Irish Catholics against the instructions of the Pope as conveyed in the letter from Rome to the archbishops' assessments a day or two ago. It is plain and reasonable talk that The Citizen utters, and if heeded will teach the Pope his place, which is not in politics.

A DISGUSTED traveler, who called on Consul Mosby at Hong Kong, sent up his card and got it back again with the request to bring it up himself. Complying with the request he found the ex-guerrilla with his heels on the table and his thumbs in his armpits, and was further made unhappy by being interrogated as to who in gehenna he was, and where in gehenna he came from.

THE TRUSTEES of Asbury College in Indiana, find themselves in a peculiar and highly embarrassing predicament. They have been offered a donation of a million dollars by a gentleman who rejoices in the eccentric name of De Pauw. Under ordinary circumstances the offer is one that would not occasion embarrassment, but the donor accompanies his gift by the troublesome condition that the college name should be changed to his own, so as to perpetuate his memory. The trustees want the money, but are puzzled to know whether they would be justified in complying with the necessary requirements to obtain it.

MORE MONEY having been appropriated for the purpose work has been resumed on the Washington monument, the time for the completion of which is now fixed for December 1885. The shaft has reached the height of 349 feet, and when completed will be 555 feet 500 feet of stone and 55 feet of glass. It is claimed that the monument will be the highest structure ever erected by man. The Strasburg Cathedral tower to the height of 468 feet, and St. Peter's at Rome, 445 feet. The spire of the cathedral of Cologne rises to 511 feet, and the highest of the pyramids was but 480 feet high when it was first built.

AN ENGLISH scientist has just completed some life-tables which show the present average life period is 39.9 years for men and 41.9 years for women, an increase of about two years for each sex over the average of 30 years ago. The increase has been largely in the working classes between the ages of 20 and 60 years. The New York Medical Record, commenting on the showing, believes it is chiefly due to the prevention of zymotic diseases, to which branch of medical science much attention has been paid during the past quarter of a century.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diphtheria and Canker Mouth. Sold by C. M. I. Drug Store. (12)

THE PASTOR of a fashionable church, on Fifth avenue, New York, recently read a paper opposing the coeducation of the sexes, in the course of which he said: "The man does not become effeminate; the woman does become masculine, coarse, unrefined and immodest. That is in the nature of the case and varies in degree according to circumstances. Those who favor the coeducation of the sexes know that when young men and women meet daily in similar pursuits, and become accustomed to each other's ways under various and trying circumstances of school life, the restraint natural in each other's society is utterly lost. The facts of experience are here incontrovertible. If such is the case among cultivated young people brought together for the purpose of education, what shall we infer concerning the influence of free communication and association between those of different sexes of the lower ranks, who have no inbred ideas of refinement, who have never learned modesty, and who have no home associations to foster purity?" The pastor's name is Rev. Roderick Terry. He may be a satisfactory preacher to his fashionable congregation, but we undertake to say he knows or at least teaches little of the gospel of his Master, who found his closest friends and companions among the poor whom Mr. Terry speaks of slightly and with rank disrespect. The "cultivated young people" are the children of rich parents attending fashionable schools, and the "lower ranks" are the offspring of the poor. Mr. Terry knows very little of the poor, or he would know that as many of them have "inbred ideas of refinement" as the rich enjoy, and that the former would frequently be shocked at the customs conversation, and dress of the high-toned society which Mr. Terry enjoys and lauds. The poor would condemn many of the ladies of that society for having "never learned morality" enough to guard them from a style of dress which encourages impurity, and of conduct that weakens the marriage tie. The reverend gentleman, if he has no better argument than the one he has presented against the co-education of the sexes, had better say nothing on the subject; or, at least, confine his remarks to his fashionable parishioners. The morals of the "lower ranks" do not suffer from co-education, whatever may be the rule with "cultivated young people."

PRESIDENT ELIOT, of Harvard, thinks that it would be a great improvement in the relation between minister and congregation, "if the minister were frankly allowed sometimes to comment on a fresh book instead of preaching a sermon, sometimes to read other men's sermons instead of his own, and, in general, to direct his hearers to good reading, and bring them to know something of the minds and works of the leaders of the race, living and dead." The suggestion, were it carried out, would certainly prove beneficial to the ordinary congregation, whatever it might do for the average minister. Truly good and learned as ministers are, about nine-tenths of them are capable of writing and delivering a good deal more uninteresting and stupid sermons than the other tenth; then it would be an improvement were the one to furnish the discourses for the nine to deliver.

DUKES, the Pennsylvanian who maligned the daughter of Captain Nult and then murdered the father, is suffering the lot of Cain. He is ostracised by everybody except his own family, and walks about the streets with his eyes cast upon the ground and his hat pulled over his heavy brow. The only man who befriends him is one McCormick, a town bruiser and chronic fighter, who rather likes the excitement of the thing. Why doesn't the miserable wretch flee from the place where he is known and despised, and hide himself in a remote corner of this or some other country.
