BUTLER'S SPOONS.

The Governor's Account of the Origin of the Famous Story.

Louisville, July 25. - Now that Ben Butler is making a fight on the Tewksbury Almshouse platform for the democratic nomination for President, a story concerning his most notorious public record will be in order. Senator Beck of Kentucky, who has a great personal fondness for the Massachusetts statesman, is the authority for it. When Butler was in Congress he was sent to Nova Scotia, one member of a committee to look into a fishery question, and Beck was a Senate member of the same committee. The trip occupied some weeks, and the two became exceedingly friendly, so much so, in fact, that the reports of it in Kentucky began to affect Beck's popularity and he arranged a very dramatic quarrel with Butler, which was duly reported for Kentucky consumption, and thoroughly cleared Beck's home atmosphere. The personal friendship of the two has never flagged, however. On their return from Nova Scotia, Beck stopped at Butler's residence at Newburyport, and there for the first time heard the origin of the famous "spoons" story, as related by Butler himself. There is a tinge of romance in it which is quite creditable to the better feelings of Butler and presents him in the attitude of having endured a great deal of opprobrium rather than tell the true story and thus by acquitting himself plunge the family of a neighbor into grief and shame. Senator Beck asked Butler for the origin of the scandal and it was told as follows:

THE FAMOUS SPOON STORY.

"While I was in New Orleans there were a number of complaints brought to me of private houses being entered by soldiers and plundered of fine plate, pictures and other valuable adornments that struck the fancy of the marauders. I referred these complaints to a young officer on my staff with orders to investigate them strictly. He reported to me that the complaints were greatly exaggerated and had originated from the impudence and trespasses of private soldiers. Complaints continued to come in, and on investigation were similarly disposed of. One day, while I was in a rather bad humor, a prominent citizen of New Orleans came to my office and renewed the old cry. His house had been invaded and stripped of all its valuable ornaments, and he came to me to recover them. 'If the United States' said he, 'has sent an army of robbers down here, and robbery is their object, very well, I can put up with it; but if robbery is not authorized, then I want my property restored.'

"Being out of temper I answered him rather gruffly and told him that I did not believe a word of his story; that I had had numerous cases investigated without finding any truth in the report and that I thought it was a system of lies to annoy the Union forces and attempt to awaken sympathy. In considerable passion I then ordered him away and said I did not want to hear any more such tales. To my surprise he said he did not care a who I was or what I thought; that his valuables had been stolen and he intended to complain whenever it was necessary. He was so much in earnest that a thought struck me, and I intended to test him to the utmost.

"Get out of my office," said I, in feigned passion, 'and stop these lying complaints or I'll have you taken out and shot.' 'You may shoot and be —' responded the indignant Creole, 'but I shall complain as long as a body of robbers and thieves plunder me.' 'Orderly!' I cried, and an officer appeared. 'Take a file of men and shoot this rebel immediately.'

"ROBBED BY A YOUNG OFFICER. 'The orderly went out and soon returned with a file of men. In the meantime the Creole was expressing his opinion of the government, its troops and myself in language so earnest and sincere that I could not doubt the truth of his complaint. He continued it even after the orderly had roughly seized him and was pushing him along to execution. At that moment I called him back, dismissed the file, and, explaining the nature of the preceding investigations, asked him for minute details as to the robbery of his house, and told him I would investigate it myself.

"He identified the hackman who had brought the robbers to his residence and removed the booty, and, acting on his clue, I soon found the hackman and compelled him to tell the whole truth. He admitted that he had driven an officer and soldiers to a number of houses on similar errands, and finally took me to a house where the plunder was stored. It was overflowing with fine pictures, plate, silver spoons, valuable ornaments and bric-a-brac. He then told me who the plundering officer was and to my surprise it was the young staff officer to whom I had entrusted the investigations and in whom, up to that moment, I had imposed every confidence. He was the son of a man I knew well at Newburyport. I had the plunder removed to my warehouse until it could be claimed and restored. Then the staff officer was arrested, tried, sentenced and shot. I never sent any word home as to the manner of his death, and his family thought he had died or was killed in the service."

"Why have you never told this story before, and cleared yourself of the offensive charges?" asked Senator Beck.

"Ob," said Butler, relapsing into his usual humor, "they would get up some other — lie on me if I did."

BUTLER AND SALMON P. CHASE.

When Chief Justice Chase was a candidate for the Presidential nomination in 1868, Judge William Brown, of Nicholasville, Ky., well known about Washington as a successful lobbyist and claim agent, under the familiar title of Bill Brown, went to New York to assist in managing Chase's opportunities. There one day he met Butler on the street, who said:

"You had better let Chase alone. He hasn't got sense enough to make a good President." "What?" asked Brown, in astonishment; "Chase, Governor of Ohio, United States Senator, Secretary of the Treasury and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, hasn't sense enough to be President?" "No," said Butler, coolly. "Why, he's a poor man to-day. If it were not for his salary as Chief Justice he could not support himself in Washington. When he was Secretary of the Treasury he handled immense sums of money and let Jay Cooke and a lot of fellows make $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 and he did not get a cent. If I had been Secretary, Cooke would have got less, the Treasury a great deal more, and I would have made plenty myself."

IT WAS PRETTY WELL DONE.

A prominent Washington official who was some years ago a reporter on the Wochester Spy, tells a good story of Butler's readiness. He was attending a Republican State convention where the organization was against him and had kept him down as long as possible. At the time there had been some insinuations that Butler's father had been one of Captain Kidd's crew of enterprising buccaneers. Butler at length obtained the floor and in a tremendous and eloquent plea succeeded in holding the attention and interest of the convention. It was almost turning his way and at last he came to speak of his father's traders. He walked down to the footlights and, in broken voice, the tears rolling down his cheeks, defended his father's memory with such touching eloquence that he fairly won all opposition. As he stood over the footlights waiting for the applause to die away, he put his hand as if to wipe away the tears, and shading his eyes, looked down at the row of reporters in the orchestra and said: "That was pretty well done, wasn't it, boys?"

How Sparrows May be Extterminated.

Professor Elliot Cones, of the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, has opened an active campaign against the sparrows. The following is his proposed plan of action: OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL SURVEY OF THE TERRITORIES, WASHINGTON, July 30. — MAJOR LYDECKER, Engineer Commissioner, D. C. — Dear Sir: Recalling our informal conversation on the subject of the sparrow nuisance, in which it seemed that you agreed with me respecting the uselessness and injuriousness of the birds, and expressed yourself as desirous of taking measures to exterminate them from the city, should any feasible plan be submitted to the commissioners, I beg to indicate the means by which, in my judgment, that end can be attained. 1. Abolish the legal penalty for killing the birds. As the game law of the District now stands, Section 9 forbids the killing of any wren, sparrow, etc., under a penalty of $2. 2. Permit the sparrows to be killed within the city limits by any means, excepting, of course, the use of fire arms. 3. Offer a small bounty—say 2 cents a head—for dead sparrows. 4. Make sparrow heads receivable for taxes at the same rate. This is only another form of offering the same bounty, and one which I am informed has been adopted in some cases elsewhere. 5. Make it a part of the ordinary care of the public streets and parks to destroy the nests and young. These measures are perfectly practical and practicable. Should they be faithfully carried out, the sparrows would disappear within a year, or at any rate be so greatly reduced in numbers as to cease to be a nuisance, and you would certainly win for yourself the lasting gratitude of the citizens of Washington.
