self; other have tried to destroy other people's property, and a more desperate class was bent on killing officials and those offensive to them. None of their methods is allowable in the United States. Here there is but one way that is recognized as legitimate and lawful for bringing about a political revolution, and that is through the ballot box. Every citizen in the land has the undisputed right to attempt a revolution in the manner suggested, and he is successful in his right to the enjoyment of the fruits of that revolution will not be denied him. Horse thieves have the right to meet in political convention and put forth a ticket made up of horse thieves, and vote for that ticket, and if they are in a majority they have the right in this republic to take control of the offices and the government. So the Socialists have the liberty to nominate and to elect if they can, and in the event of their success at the polls they can make this a Socialistic republic, and operate it in accordance with their peculiar ideas of government.

But this liberty must not be construed into the license which the Chicago and New York Anarchists and Socialists assumed, when they undertook to seize control by first killing officers, nobody will complain if all the Socialists, the Anarchists and the Communists unite in a political organization, and try to get control of cities, States and the nation through the legitimate road—the ballot-box. Nobody will fear any serious consequences from the operations of such an organization. The infamous doctrines taught by the Socialists are not so well liked in this country as to make it probable that they will be accepted by any considerable number of citizens, and the only rights which aliens have are those which command an obedience to the laws and a show of respect for the institutions of the republic.

LYNCH LAW.

The New Orleans City Item says: There has been on an average at least one lynching party per day during the past year in one part of the United States of another. Usually, a skillful hand is used to execute the outrage in a one-sided dispatch to the press. The victim is shown to be an outlaw—either by reason of impudently crime, his poverty, low rank in life, or a credence of race, and then comes the recital of the brutal act of his taking off, glossed over as an act of just vengeance of a virtuous and outraged people. The rest is silence.

This statement is startling in its character, and if true, as it doubtless is, should call forth unstinted condemnation. In countries that are new, where courts and their machinery have not as yet started operations, there may be some excuse for vigilance committees, law and order leagues, and the exercise of summary justice at the hands of Judge Lynch; but in communities where law has established its safeguards to protect society, and has all the power and means to execute its mandates, it is a burning shame that any civilized country should have such a record as the United States is given in the above. It may be that Judge Lynch in some cases has dispensed justice to the guilty more promptly than is done in courts of law, but the uneasiness that this summary vengeance has created in communities, and that feeling of insecurity that is the rule wherever it obtains, more than outbalances whatever of satisfaction the prompt action of Judge Lynch may have given in any particular case. You can't do evil that good may come. The good never comes and the evil always remains.

THE LEADERS of the Bulgarian revolutionists have found their failure has cost them considerably. From the dispatches we learn that two of the prime movers in the revolution, Zankoff and Gueff, have been tried by court martial and sentenced to death, while Clement, another leader, was tried by the same court and sentenced to imprisonment for life. Had this revolution been successful how different had been the fate of these men! Then they would have been patriots, not traitors; they would have been honored, not despised; elevated to positions of honor and ennobled, instead of meeting a rebel's fate. What magic there is in success! Maxims: Therefore with all thy planning, plan to be successful.

SUPERFICIALNESS.

"Errors like straw, upon the surface flow; He who would search for pearls, must dive below." If there is one failing our age may be charged with more than another, it is superficialness. Perhaps not in the world of mechanics or of commerce—the perfection of the arts, the improvements in machinery of all description, and the invention of much that our fathers never dreamed of in their philosophy, would at once disprove the statement that this age possessed but superficial knowledge in mechanics. Men have written their thoughts in iron. Locomotives, majestic steam ships, Atlantic cables, the telegraph, the wonders of the telephone and printing press; the machinery that cultivates the soil, that reaps the harvests, that conveys the wool and the cotton-down and the silk worms' shining thread into fabrics both useful and ornamental, are the books that have been written all of which prove the depth of thought and most marvelous skill in the world of mechanics. Nor can the age be upbraided with superficialness of knowledge in matters of commerce. In the tricks of trade men are well versed. They are skillful in the use of every thrust and ward known to the commercial world; and are pre-eminently successful in accumulating wealth though the means are not always justified by honor.

But when you turn from those fields that are productive of material prosperity to the region of thought, knowledge, education and general learning, you then enter the domain where superficialness reigns supreme. The charge we make extends to literature, to politics, and to religion. The groaning press throws off its million volumes every day. The price of books is so reduced that the poorest classes may have a small collection of choice books at least—a small library. Yet who reads? What proportion of those who are supposed to be "well informed" are deeply read in the works of the masters of literature? Very few. For the most part they are versed in what John Randolph, of Roanoke, would have called title pages. That is, they know of the existence of such and such books and authors, and remember some of the titles on the pages as they casually glanced through them at the time of placing them in the library; but they have failed to read the books carefully, and digest the thoughts of the author. Hence, it happens that so long as you merely converse about the outside of books, and mention the names of authors and their subjects your average "well informed man" can be glib enough on these glittering generalities; but when you open the books, and begin a discussion of the merits or demerits of the author's theories and conclusions you discover as a rule that you have rent the gauze by which your "well informed man" was surrounded, he stands before you in all his naked ignorance.

It is so in politics as well as in literature. The ordinary politician and the rabble who are ready to throw up their sweaty caps now for Pompey, and now for Caesar are ignorant of the principles of political science, and uninformed as to the issues upon which the respective parties are divided, and the multitude act at the will of the political trickster, who cunningly appeals to their immediate interests on all questions, those of national importance as well as those of only local consequence; instead of educating them to act upon the enlightened principles of political science. As in literature and science, so men are content to be superficial in their religious knowledge. Indeed, religion seems to be one of those subjects mankind finds it convenient not to trouble itself very much about, but leave it for the ministers to manage according to their best invention.

It is needless to add that THE HERALD considers his superficialness as all wrong. It is an evil that should not only be reformed indifferently but altogether. Let it be remembered that if we stop to examine every stone, every flower, or pretty shell, we would not be able to discover much treasure. Life is too short to permit us to go over the earth's surface in this manner. So life is too short for us to read all the books on the great variety of subjects of which men have written. But we can select the subjects that will be of the greatest value to us, that will be most likely to develop us and our children into the noblest manhood and womanhood, and that shall best prepare us and them for the duties and responsibilities in life. Select then the best authors for your reading, and absorb their noblest thoughts and sentiments, and let your actions as parents, citizens, and God's children weave those noblest, best sentiments into the fabric of your lives.

SOTTO VOCE.

SHERIFF—to criminal about to be hanged—Have you any wish to make before your execution? CRIMINAL—Yes, sir. I would like to learn the Prussian language.

A WELL KNOWN apostate from the Mormon Church was heard to exclaim on emerging from the "camp fire" on the night of M. M. Kalsh's speech: "Whew! another evening like that, and I should be driven to re-baptism."

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER, "Who was the strongest man that ever lived?" BRIGHT PUPIL—"Sullivan."

THE HOT weather is a topic that may be thought to have been worn threadbare, but a gentleman who delivered the closing prayer at the —th ward Meeting House last Sunday certainly rung a new change upon it: "Oh Lord" he prayed, "we do not feel to multiply utterances before thee to-night, for the weather is very warm, and we know that we are not judged by the multiplicity of our words."

THE SCHOOLS.

District Schools of Salt Lake County and Their Teachers.

THE HERALD has before mentioned the fact that the district schools of Salt Lake County would be assumed this year by a corps of teachers of more than usual efficiency. Most of the schools throw open their doors to-morrow morning, and through the courtesy of Superintendent Stewart we are enabled to present a list of the teachers in each district. Where no name of assistant appears, his name is unknown or the school is conducted solely by the principal. Several dates are also omitted, where Mr. Stewart was not certain as to the time:

The Seventh district (controlled by liberal trustees) will, it is said, be conducted by A. S. Kendall, but Mr. Stewart states that he has failed to secure his certificate, and we are not informed when he proposes opening. Mr. Watson, the Tenth Ward teacher, is a southern educational man, who now takes a city school for the first time. Mr. Pack, who conducts the Seventeenth district, is one of Dr. Park's graduates, and a young man whose attainments are well spoken of.

THE HERALD looks to see parents alive to their duties in educating their children, and expects to record all the school-houses as filled to their utmost capacity.

LITERATURE.

St. Nicholas for September. From the frontispiece, which is a reproduction of Landseer's celebrated portrait of himself and his two dogs, "The Co. noiseurs," to the Riddle-box with its ingenious puzzles, St. Nicholas is crowded with bright and interesting matter for girls and boys and all who love them. A paper on English Art and Artists, by Clara Erskine Clement, opens the number. It is illustrated by the frontispiece and by pictures by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Thomas Gainsborough, and others. "Little Lord Fauntleroy" is carried forward in two chapters in which Mrs. Burnett begins to throw some light on the final development next month. The other serials, too, increase in interest as they near their conclusions. J. T. Crowbridge's "Kelp-gatherers" becomes very much tangled up in some unfortunate happenings; Rose Lattimore Ailing shows how the fair revolutionists in "Nan's Revolt" progressed bravely in their cause; in this installment of Horace E. Scudder's serial George Washington once more returns to private life; and Helen Eckert explains some curious relations between letters and numbers in "Wonders of the Alphabet." "The Brownies" with their usual enterprise take up the game of lawn tennis, as Palmer Cox amusingly tells in verse and pictures; and Susan Anna Brown describes a clever Italian game for entertaining young Americans. Among the other contents especially noteworthy are the "Work and Play" paper on "Venetian Masquerade," by Charles Godfrey Leland; a true account by Edward Eggleston of how one boy saved three lives on Lake George; and a story by Annie A. Preston, called "A Matter-of-fact Cinderella," which is good enough to be true, if it isn't.

MISS MELINDA'S OPPORTUNITY. A Story, by Henry Bayne, Boston: Roberts Brothers, Salt Lake; Dwyer's Bookstore, Price, $1.

Helen Campbell has given us several books, and they are all good ones, but none possesses the merits of this last one, which is excellent as a literary effort, decidedly clear as a romance and moral and inspiring in tone and purpose. Read and studied by the ordinary girl it will inspire her to a more ambitious, a more self-reliant, a more useful life, and will encourage her to laudable efforts which she might not otherwise make. It is one of these novels which, to read, does not waste time, and when you have finished it you do not feel like casting the book aside to be forgotten.

PROVO POINTS.

THE QUARTERLY conference of Utah Stake will commence in the stake Tabernacle on Saturday, September 4th, at 10 a.m.

DOCTORS PIKE and Hardy, medical superintendents at the Insane Asylum, occupy the front corner rooms over the bank as their dispensary.

AMONG THE theatrical attractions for conference visitors, the "Green Lanes of England" with L. A. Cummings and J. D. Spencer, of the Salt Lake Club, in the cast, will certainly be appreciated and draw another full house. There is talk of adding more winter to the snow storm scene, which will make it appear more realistic to the audience. With this one exception the scenery cannot well be improved and is of itself, almost worth the price of admission.

AN INTERESTING conjoint meeting of the Young Men's and Young Ladies' Improvement Associations, was held in the Provo meeting house on Friday evening. There was a fifteen minute lecture by Prof. G. H. Brigham, followed by instrumental and vocal music, duets, comic songs and recitations, and a very interesting lecture on the subject of mutual improvement by Prof. J. E. Talmage. President B. Cluff also spoke a few minutes on the subject of co-operation among the young people, and said there had been suggestions of establishing a Young Peoples' Co-operative Institution, and mentioned several enterprises which could profitably be carried on by such an organization. He gave out an appointment for those desiring to take an interest in such an enterprise, to meet on Friday evening, September 3d, at the meeting house.
