PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

Experiments Upon the Curious and Interesting Phenomena of Hypnotism.

Hypnotism, that obscure subject which the light of modern science fails to make quite clear, possesses a curious interest for nearly all minds. Among scientists who have lately concerned themselves with the strange power is the Berlin Medical Society, before which Dr. Feldmann, a French physician, introduced by Professor Virchow, made a number of experiments, among them the following: A young man offered himself as a "medium" or subject of experiment, and after a few seconds of the usual manipulations on the part of Dr. Feldmann, he succumbed to a deep magnetic sleep, becoming entirely apathetic and motionless. In this state of "suggestion," as it is termed, Dr. Feldmann showed the influence of various medicaments on the medium, who took quinine for sugar, sneezing his lips with enjoyment, and unheeded ammonia to be perfume, and smelt at it for some time. Immediately afterwards, following the will of the doctor, he showed the usual signs of abhorrence of those bitter and caustic substances. With the same success he ate a lemon for an apple. A piece of camphor held on his forehead had a singular effect. The medium bent his body far backwards and had to be held in his chair. A magnet caused a dreamy state, during which the medium related his impressions as to events in the street, in which he believed himself to be. Then the medium obeyed the will of the doctor in various ways, shoveling snow, skating, falling and rising again with one jump as the doctor's suggestion, and finally took a pocketbook by force out of Professor Virchow's pockets. He was then ordered by Dr. Feldmann to resent himself, and soon woke out of the hypnotic sleep, remembering nothing of what had happened.

Only a small proportion of persons ever faint under any circumstances. But a few faint at the slightest cause, fear, joy, grief, unpleasant sights, odors, smells, heated and impure air, sudden accident or some irritation of the stomach or other internal organs, and each should guard himself at his own point of exposure. In any case of faintness every obstacle to the freest action of the heart and lungs should be removed by the loosening of the clothing. But the first thing is to get the patient into a recumbent posture, flat on the back. We know of one person subject to fainting who had learned always, at the first motion, to take this posture of her own accord, and it speedily terminated the attack. If the person is in a crowded assembly, she should at once be taken into fresh air, but under no circumstances should anything be placed over her head. The more common form of fainting does not necessarily tend to shorten life.

Bandaging the Eye. The custom, prevalent among physicians as well as the laity, of tightly bandaging or tying up the eye as soon as it becomes inflamed or sore, is pronounced by Herald of Health a bad one. The result upon the eye is to preclude the free access and beneficial effects of fresh, cool air, and at the same time to prevent or greatly retard the free egress of the hot tears and morbid secretions of the inflamed conjunctiva or cornea, or both. These cases, too, where a foreign substance has got into the eye, the bandage which is usually clapped on the first thing presses the lids more closely against the ball and thus increases the pain and discomfort by augmenting the lacration caused by the foreign body. This cannot fail to be harmful. In those cases where the light is painful, adjust over the organ a neatly fitting shade, which, while it excludes the light, allows the free access of air.
