John A. Hill, charged with adultery, said he had concluded to obey the law in the future and teach others to do the same. He was sent up for one month and costs of suit.

The defense in the McFarlane case offered further proof of the territorial prejudice and various causes, and renewed their application for a continuance, which was again overruled and an exception taken.

John Jackson, of Fillmore, was put upon trial for unlawful cohabitation. He was acquitted. Fred Albrecht made application for citizenship. He was denied that privilege, however, for the reason that he believed the revelation on celestial marriage to be true. He said he would obey the law in the future.

Peter Oelshberger, when called for sentence, said in answer to the question by the court, that he had no profession to make and was sentenced to six months and costs.

Mr. King notified the court that a motion for a new trial would be made in the case and asked that defendant be admitted to call pending the appeal. The motion was allowed and bail was fixed at $2,000.

Mr. Varian called attention to the difficulty of the application of the territorial prejudice and to the various causes. He maintained that it was a complicated question he said, and one that had been decided in various ways by the different judges.
