HOW TO GIVE DINNER

Some Useful Hints to Young Hostesses.

NEVER LOSE YOUR COMPOSURE

A Simple Dinner is Often Acceptable to Exact Guests—"The Man Who Eats Your Salt is Sacred."

It is the wife who must struggle with the problem of domestic defeat or victory. When Washington Irving was presented at the Court of Dresden his Saxon majesty remarked: "Mr. Irving, with a republic so liberal you can have no servants in America."

ners, to make a house luxurious, ornamental, cheerful and restful, to have an artistic sense of the fitness of things, that she should dress and entertain in perfect accord with her station, her means and her husband's ambition, that she should master, unassisted, all the laws and the noble "Art of Entertaining," has not this something of the nature of a large contract? She has taken the contract and filled it.

Who has not read Thackeray's witty descriptions of these fallows of dinners, poor and pretentious, ordered in from the grocer's and unobtainable in London? "If they could have a leg of mutton, an apple pudding and a glass of sherry, they would do well, but they must shine, they must outdo their neighbors."

The simple dinner might be characterized, thus, giving the essentials as a soup, a fish, a roast, one entrée, a salad, an ice and fruit—simply the fruit—in season, a cup of coffee afterwards, with a glass of sherry, a caviar or champagne, good enough for any hostess; such a dinner is possible to the person of moderate means, in the other it may be of duchesse lace over red, with velvet mat under the silver service.

It is a young woman entering society; we should recommend a certain exclusiveness. Do not snub exclusiveness, but it is always well to choose one's friends wisely. The respect she owes to her friends is not the most perfect being in all the world, we do not wish to intimate with too much imperfection. A broken friendship is a very painful thing. We should think twice before we give an intimate friendship to anyone.

It is an incontestable fact that dinners are made elaborate only at a considerable risk. As they increase in size and importance their character is likely to deteriorate. This is true not only with regard to the number of guests, but with reference to the number of dishes that go to make up a bill of fare.

Dr. Johnson describes a dinner at Mrs. Thrale's, which shows us what was considered luxurious two hundred years ago. "The dinner was excellent. First course, soups at head and foot, removed by fish and a saddle of mutton; second course, a fowl they called galena at head, a mutton larger than our Irish turkeys at foot; third course, four different kinds, pineapple, grapes, raspberry and a fourth. In each remove four dishes, the first two courses served on massive plates."
