Rests the Tired Brain

Hood's Sarsaparilla Gives Nerve Strength and Bodily Health. Hood's Pills are "Much in Little." "I have used Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills for many years and consider them the best on the market. Hood's Sarsaparilla has given me health and strength from time to time when tired and worn out from overwork and the worry of business. It has purified my blood, toned my nerves, and rested my tired brain by restoring sleep and invigorating my entire system. Hood's Vegetable Pills are much in little. I use no others. They invigorate the liver to healthy action, act gently on the bowels, which the latter part of his life was spent. For over thirty years "Major Bond" lived in Humboldt, Kan., where he married and engaged in many important and successful enterprises. Not until he was upon his deathbed did he disclose the fact, hitherto unsuspected by his most intimate friends, that he had been wearing a false name and covering up important chapters in his life history. The revelations when he then made seemed so incredible that for days the watchers at his bedside believed them to be only his delirious dreams.

In 1863 a tall man of military bearing came to Allen county, Kan., giving his name as Joseph Bond, claiming to hail from Pennsylvania. In those days people didn't inquire closely into the antecedents of a stranger, provided he was on the right side of the slavery question. He settled in the town of Humboldt. Bond possessed considerable money and invested in land and in various industries that sprung up at the close of the civil war. In 1868 he married a woman about 35 years of age—a Miss Turner—who possessed beauty and some wealth. Bond was successful in a financial way, making money rapidly in all his ventures. He claimed to have been a graduate of a Pennsylvania law school and a classmate of Sam Randall. He possessed a fine general education and, having a splendid knowledge of law, subsequently held many positions of trust and honor in the country. People who knew him considered him a just man, but one who would take advantage in a deal if there was any money in it for himself. He added farm after farm to his possessions until about two years ago, when called upon to fill a bond, he stated under oath that he possessed in the neighborhood of 100,000 acres of unincumbered land in the states of Kansas, Missouri, California, Iowa and Nebraska. In addition to this he was interested in a great many local enterprises and was for many years the vice-president of the First National Bank of Humboldt.

During the early '70's he built a bridge across the Neosho river at Humboldt at a cost of $10,000 and for two or three months kept the toll-gate himself and made an immense amount of money, the receipts often over-running $100 a day. It was currently reported that the bridge paid for itself the first nine months after its completion. In addition Bond obtained a subsidy from farmers as an inducement to build the bridge. He sold it to the town subsequently for the original price. This was his thirty years' residence at Humboldt. Here frequent pilgrimages away from home, telling his wife on each occasion that he was going away on business and would be gone a short time. There was nothing remarkable in this, as his large business, which was managed entirely by himself, would warrant his absence from home much of the time. Not long since he was taken violently ill and the attending physician told him that he had a very short time to live. Upon learning this, he sent for George C. Barber, cashier of the Humboldt bank, and arranged to have his will made. He also stated that he had another wife somewhere in the west. They thought he was wandering, and paid no attention to his remarks. However, after repeated visits and earnest solicitation on the part of the sick man, they at length concluded to humor his whim. Bond had forgotten his married name, but told them to telegraph to the Bank of California. "Give name and address of Jacob Brown's daughter." In due time the reply came, "Mrs. Frank Kinney, Salt Lake City."

The Bond family and friends were thunderstruck. They immediately sent a dispatch to the address and an answer was received saying that Mrs. Kinney would leave on the first train. In due course of time the lady arrived from Salt Lake City. She brought her own marriage certificate and that of her mother. Bond died just before her arrival. She stated that in 1853 her mother married Bond in New York under the name of Jacob Brown. Subsequently they moved to California. From there, possessing considerable property at the time of her marriage with him, Bond, it appears, schemed to get this property in his possession, and after having lived with the woman seven years, and having had three children born to them, all landed new improvements are completed, will be rushed. The machinery at the Massachusetts, which property was recently purchased by the Alliance company, is being overhauled and placed in first-class shape, and as soon as it is ready a survey of the old workings in the Massachusetts will be made so that the company will have a thorough knowledge of what has been done and know how to start intelligent development of its purchase. The grit and faith of the Alliance company is deserving of rich reward, for without taking out a pound of ore it has spent nearly $300,000 in developments, and still the work goes on. Strange as it may seem, too, the stock of the company is held closely and cannot be found on the market.

MY LADY'S GOWN.

What patient care is spent to make a lady's gown a glowing dream; How weary eyes and glowing cheeks O'er each embroidered point and seam. No lash but hunger serves to drive The falling hand to toil so dear, For weary eyes will keep alive To drain its last and salt sea-tear. We boast of prices fabulous—We pay for trappings for a rout, But in accountings made by us The deeper costs are all left out. Yet pity not the seamstress pale, But rather pity father dear, Who sees the day when he must fall, Unless my lady's fate appear. STEAM BOILER EXPLOSIONS.

That frequent and careful inspection of steam boilers is most necessary has been shown conclusively in the terrible accidents which happened recently at Denver and Detroit. Boiler explosions are chronicled every day or so with hardly an explosion occurring in which there are not several persons killed or injured. Should anyone attempt to keep dynamite by the keg in the basement of a brick building or a crowded city block and should an explosion occur therefrom the people would feel like lynching the ones responsible for such criminal carelessness.

Familiarity should not breed such contempt for steam power that anyone would not be considered reprehensible who put a steam boiler under a block in which a hundreds of people without availing himself of every safeguard and of frequent expert inspection.

Such inspections as far instance the Hartford Steam Boiler Insurance and Inspection company make not only guard against casualties but often more than pay for their trifling cost by suggestions which lead to the saving of fuel and the preservation of the boilers. Windsor & Hudson the local representatives of the Hartford, state that while nearly all manufacturing institutions have their boilers frequently and carefully inspected, and every reasonable care used; yet that hardly any of the owners of large buildings think it necessary to take any such precaution with their heating boilers.

This city has been very fortunate both with regard to large fires and explosions. Consequently the casualties which have occurred in other cities do not worry us as they should. Insurance costs but little, and a company which has a large money interest at stake is going to ward off loss if possible, with all the knowledge their long experience has taught them. Should a casualty, such as happened at Denver or at Detroit, occur here, it would at least prove that the owner of the boiler doing the damage had done all in his power to prevent such disasters if he could show a clean inspection sheet from either an insurance company or a municipal inspector. Take care of the steam boilers.
