A Desperate Fight Between the McKinleyites and Bryan Republicans.

CAME NEAR BEING A RIOT.

Attempt to Tear Up the Canton Statesman's Portrait.

The Final Test Showed That the McKinley Men Gently Outnumbered the Other Faction, However, and They Swept the Platter Clean, Electing Their Own Delegates to Ogdin, While Giving Their Opponents a Small Representation.

For a newspaper to be able to convey to the public an adequate idea of the second Republican county convention held yesterday to elect delegates to the Ogdin convention, the purpose of which is to nominate a candidate for congress, it would be necessary to have a photographic attachment of that copy.

No words in black and white can describe the scenes of disorder and bitter strife that prevailed almost throughout the entire convention. In plain language it was more like a riot between mob elements than the deliberations of a political party in convention.

The disensions commenced when an effort was made, at the convening of the committee on credentials—George W. Swenson, George A. Smith, J. T. Axton, W. C. B. Allen, R. H. McKaig, A. E. Short, F. W. Ashton.

chairman and did as well as any one could have done under the circumstances, for it was impossible to control the turbulent spirits of the raging delegates. Colonel George B. Squires was the permanent chairman and had little to do, as the fighting had all been done before he was called to the chair. The attendance of delegates was much larger than at the McKinley convention, but there were very few spectators, the interest of the day apparently centering in the Democratic convention. Of the delegates elected to the Ogdin convention a small percentage were of the straight out silver men.

County Chairman Arthur H. Parsons officiated again to call the convention to order, and Secretary J. F. Axton read the call. Mr. Parsons named A. H. Love temporary chairman, Mrs. Annie Adams temporary secretary and Charles A. Goodsell temporary sergeant-at-arms. They were sustained and Mr. Love, proceeding to the chair, called to order. He said he should refrain from making a speech, as there was more important business in hand. He then called for the pleasure of the convention, and took occasion to call attention to the necessity of raising about $75 for expenses. On suggestion a committee composed of J. T. Axton, H. McKaig and N. S. Timpon was named to collect the amount from the delegates.

Motions prevailed to select committees on credentials, permanent organization, order of business and resolutions, to consist of seven members each, one to be chosen by the delegates from each municipal ward and two from outside precincts. A recess of ten minutes was then taken to enable the delegates to choose their members of the various committees.

After the recess the chair announced that only $30 of the necessary $75 had been raised, and suggested that the delegates raise $5 from each municipal ward, and $8 from the outside, which was done.

The committees were then selected as follows: Committee on credentials—George W. Swenson, George A. Smith, J. T. Axton, W. C. B. Allen, R. H. McKaig, A. E. Short, F. W. Ashton.

Committee on permanent organization and order of business—Henry Harker, F. M. Bishop, W. C. Lyne, Chris Diehl, C. E. Offenbach, Josiah Lees, George H. Ingham.

Committee on resolutions—G. W. Moyer, H. M. Pitt, Edgar S. Urry, Fred E. McGurrian, E. G. Rogson, Mrs. Amos S. Gabbott, George B. Squires.

A recess until 7 o'clock was taken to enable the committees to report.

TURNED TO THE WALL. The decorations which had graced the theater during the McKinley convention had been allowed to remain intact after the second convention was called to order, a fact which very much displeased the silver men, and the incident of removing the portrait of McKinley from the stage where it stood beside that of Washington, was discussed by a great many delegates.

It continued up to near the time of removing the portrait, and culminated just prior to that time in Colonel George B. Squires holding a consultation with ex-Governor Thomas as to the advisability of allowing the picture to remain. It was decided that the disturbance might be averted if the picture was removed, and Colonel Squires took it upon himself to turn the picture of the celebrated protectionist to the wall.

The picture was no sooner missed by the McKinley men than a howl went up and a delegation of McKinley enthusiasts, headed by John Lu Taylor, made a run for the stage to remove the picture to its former abiding place. A scuffle ensued in which the picture was badly used up, but it was replaced.

CONVENTION RECONVENES. It was 7:25 o'clock when the convention reconvened in the evening. The delegates took their seats and were called to order by Temporary Chairman Love, who said that inasmuch as there had been some misunderstanding concerning the decorations, he would call upon County Chairman Parsons to make a few remarks. Mr. Parsons responded, and said he had no reason to apologize for William McKinley's picture being displayed before a Republican convention.

He would explain how it came to be there. The ladies who held the McKinley meeting in the theatre some days before, he said, had done the decorating of the lot and the chair found it necessary to call upon the sergeant-at-arms to eject him before his fighting spirits could be subdued, when the convention took adverse action as to the seating of the delegation. The rioting which marred the convention while this question was being settled was tremendous, but it was mild beside the contention over the report of the committee on permanent organization. The committee recommended by a majority that the delegates elected to the Salt Lake independent convention on Friday be endorsed as the delegates to Ogdin, and a minority report dissented, favoring carrying out the purpose for which the convention was called. The fight over the question was something terrific, the silver men being utterly defeated in the end.

The convention was held at the Salt Lake theatre and convened shortly after the McKinley convention adjourned. S. H. Love presided as temporary reported by J. F. Axton 236 delegates present, one or two precincts not represented and contests in two delegations. They were from the Fifty-first and Fifty-second precincts, the contested delegations from the Fifty-first being headed by Dr. Ewing and Judge Samuel McDowell respectively, and those from the Fifty-second by S. W. Sears and J. R. Bowditch. The committee recommended that the two delegations from the Fifty-first be seated and the one-half vote each, and that the one-half vote from the Fifty-second be seated.

CONFUSION WORSE CONFOUNDED. Confusion reigned when the reading of the report was finished. Someone moved its adoption—no one could tell—and Dr. Ewing got up to speak to the question. He was so wrought up with indignation that he could scarcely make himself coherent, as he tried to argue that his was the rightful delegation and that the other was illegitimate. He rambled so badly that the convention began to cry him down and F. G. Waite undertook to attack him to order, when he turned and called Mr. Waite, whom he characterized as a Republican whom he esteemed, but whose action he could not comprehend in thus endeavoring to prevent a legally elected delegation from being seated.

Confusion continued to grow and another point of order was made, but was held not well taken, when Dr. Ewing, his wrath increasing all the time, rejoined "Thank you" to the chair and said, "We'll teach these delegates something after awhile."

Again wandering from his subject, Dr. Ewing pointed to Colonel Squires, who had suggested that he cease speaking and offer an amendment to the report, and yelled, "I make no amendment; we'll vote her down!" He seemed to think Colonel Squires was conspiring to seat the contesting delegation, for he yelled, "You would try to deprive us of our rights and trample under foot that good old soldier," pointing to the offending picture of McKinley.

The convention went off into a wild cheer at the last remark and continued to shout until the speaker was driven to the door. Dr. Ewing, who had suggested that he cease speaking and offer an amendment to the report, and yelled, "I make no amendment; we'll vote her down!" He seemed to think Colonel Squires was conspiring to seat the contesting delegation, for he yelled, "You would try to deprive us of our rights and trample under foot that good old soldier," pointing to the offending picture of McKinley.

said he would not go till heard. The sergeant-at-arms forced him into a seat and shortly after the delegates, headed by Mr. Sears, retired. The scene that had been in progress is incapable of description, but in the din that was kept up until John Lu was suppressed, it would give "Hogan's alley" ninety-nine points and then some.

When it had quieted down again, the chair endeavored to put the original question, but was interrupted by Fred McGurrian to move an amendment to the report to seat Dr. Ewing and his delegation in the Fifty-first, and not the other. The chair misunderstood Mr. McGurrian's purpose and held him out of order, when hostilities were renewed and the yelling commencing again. A din of much rapping for order the chair succeeded in learning what the motion had been, aided by a point of order from R. H. McKaig. He revealed his decision and entertained the motion.

W. C. B. Allen of the committee on credentials stated that all the facts surrounding the election of the two delegations had been heard by the committee which had decided to give each delegation a half vote in the interest of harmony.

The motion was lost and the original report was adopted. A delegate who had looked upon "the rosy" more than was in good keeping with a well regulated delegate to a Republican convention, started a discussion of the matter, and would like to know how many Bryan and how many McKinley men were present, but was promptly suppressed.

THOUGHT THE TROUBLE OVER. The much wearied delegates who had taken no part in the rioting heaved a sigh of relief when the credentials report was disposed of, as they thought there might now be some order, but they were disappointed. That which had gone before was only a forerunner of worse to come.

The next order of business was the report of the committee on permanent organization and order of business, and Walter H. Lyne took the platform to read the report. He stated that there were two reports, the former first, it was as follows:

Your committee recommend for permanent chairman George B. Squires; vice-presidents, Miss S. W. Sears and J. R. Bowditch; secretary, Miss Susie Harper; reading clerk, R. H. McKaig; sergeant-at-arms, Charles Goodsell.

Order of business—Report of committee on credentials.

Report of committee on resolutions.

Third—Your committee recommend the appointment of delegates as follows: Two delegates to each voting precinct in the city and two delegates to precincts outside of city, in the county.

We further recommend that the delegates elected by the Independent Republican convention hold a year-end convention to revise the constitution, and be declared our delegates to the Ogdin state convention to be held on the 23rd inst. CHRISTOPHER DIEHL, secretary and acting chairman.

C. E. OFFENBACH, GEO. H. INGHAM, JOSIAH LEES, F. M. BISHOP.

This was the minority report, the readings of which followed.

Minority Report—We believe a minority of this committee disagree with the majority of this committee and recommend instead the following plan:

The election of two delegates from each voting precinct of the city and two delegates to precincts outside the city. We consider the majority recommendations irregular and unjust.

We agree with the balance of the report.

W. C. LYNE, HENRY HARKER.

The wildest confusion followed a motion to adopt the minority report. Attorney Parsons saw the confusion and tried to get the permanent officers by moving the adoption of that portion of the committee report over which there was no disagreement, but the motion was lost sight of in the tumult.

J. T. Axton got the floor and fairly went into contortions in his rage as he branded the majority report and said English would not express his contempt for a man who would favor such a scheme.

The convention bowed him down and Walter Lyne, getting the floor, declared that if the majority report prevailed he would not express his contempt for a man who would favor such a scheme.

The convention bowed him down and Walter Lyne, getting the floor, declared that if the majority report prevailed he would not express his contempt for a man who would favor such a scheme.

George W. Moyer deprecated the severe language of Mr. Axton, but agreed that the majority report should not prevail. He spoke at length and impassionately and in the end used some severe language himself.

F. G. Waite championed the majority report, but was constantly interrupted by questions and hooting from the McKinley men when he asserted that he was supporting silver and considered it better to support the silver Republicans than to support such a scheme.

The convention bowed him down and Walter Lyne, getting the floor, declared that if the majority report prevailed he would not express his contempt for a man who would favor such a scheme.

Jake Greenwald had a little say and avowedly poured oil on the troubled waters.

Then Judge Wenger moved the previous question. The motion shut off a number of delegates who wanted to speak and a delegate from the cow districts with Populist aspirations yelled for nearly five minutes, "I will be recognized as a member of this convention." He was mistaken, however, for he was not. A motion to lay the previous question on the table was carried and the disorder was renewed.

Wildest confusion held the convention absolutely at a standstill, and Judge McDowell getting disgusted moved to adjourn, a point of order that a motion was pending was held, and the chair finally succeeded in putting the question. Roll call was demanded and the minority report was adopted, 26 1/2 to 67 1/2.

A number of silver men bolted and walked out and George Thomas moved that McKinley's picture be removed. He was not entertained, but the confusion increased until Mrs. J. E. Quayle rose, the noise died out and she moved the appointment of three assistant sergeants-at-arms. The motion carried and Messrs. C. E. Offenbach, G. B. Margetts and William Doxey were appointed.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED. The report as amended by the adoption of the minority report was adopted. Colonel George B. Squires took the chair. He merely thanked the convention and called up the report of the resolutions committee, which was read by E. G. Rogson as follows:

The silver men of Salt Lake county, in convention assembled, again declare our allegiance to the cause of silver and reaffirm the Republican state platforms of 1894 and 1895. We demand that the noise die out and she moved the appointment of three assistant sergeants-at-arms. The motion carried and Messrs. C. E. Offenbach, G. B. Margetts and William Doxey were appointed.
