THE BRITISH ANSWER.

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT'S ANSWER to the amended Hay-Pauncefote treaty is a very capable bit of diplomatic literature from an English view point.

It professes an earnest desire to come to an agreement with the United States, but loses sight of nothing that may furnish points of vantage for diplomatic skulking.

In considering the Davis amendment Lord Lansdowne contends that it violates a principle hitherto found acceptable to both governments, namely, that at all times the canal be considered as a neutral ground.

Nevertheless, the governments of the United States and Great Britain, in according their protest to the construction of the canal, and guaranteeing its neutrality and security when completed, always understood that this protection and guarantee are granted conditionally.

A PATTERN FOR ANGLO-MANIACS.

IT IS REFRESHING TO FIND among the usually officious and exacting functionaries of the old world a man in an exalted position who carries democratic ideas to a point that is rarely reached, even in America.

UNCLE MARK'S CONVICTIONS.

SUGGESTIONS FOR RICH SALT LAKE MEN

To the Editor of The Herald.

In the history of the world, dating back to the earliest account of the struggles of humanity, in the barbarous and semi-barbarous conditions up to the present time, progress is shown by great epochs that strikingly mark the advance of humanity.

An important meeting of the executive board of the Mothers' congress will be held today at the Hotel Utah.

A BISHOP'S LOVE STORY.

How Queen Alexandra Helped Pre-late of London to Win a Girl.

London—Eighteen months ago Canon Ingram was probably the most miserable man in England. He had just been jilted by that celebrated beauty, Lady Ulrica.

It seems that when Lady Ulrica jilted Dr. Ingram, who is only a year or two younger than she, she yielded to the overtures of her parents, of her brother and sister.

Moreover, she convinced herself that, in spite of all that had taken place, she loved Dr. Ingram, and would not marry any other man.

But it was without success. The old king, who had a grand and aristocratic air, and a more aristocratic air than any other man in England.
