ENFORCE SEWER ORDINANCE.

BY THE TERMS of a resolution passed by the council Wednesday night at the suggestion of Councilman T. R. Black, Health Officer Wilcox was instructed to notify all property owners within the sewer district to connect their property at once with the sewers.

The new health ordinance provides that "it shall be unlawful for the owner of any residence, factory, mill, warehouse, store, office or other building, or his agent or agents, or other person having charge of or receiving rents for said property, said property being located on any street or alley along the line of any sewer, to neglect or refuse for a period of twenty days, after notice from the board of health, to connect any water closet, bath tub, sink or basin in or upon such property with such sewer."

The penalty for failure to comply with this provision is a fine of not to exceed $100 or imprisonment for not to exceed 100 days, or both fine and imprisonment. With such an ordinance on the books it is astonishing, that there are so few sewer connections in Salt Lake City.

Leaving out of consideration the benefit that would accrue to the public health as a result of compelling sewer connections, the action will be beneficial financially to the property owners. As business men and women they should see that it costs less in the long run to connect with a sewer than to dig and maintain filthy, disease-breeding cesspools.

In the matter of health too much cannot be said. The 2,350 cesspools that are to be insisted upon will mean the abolition of 2,350 foul cesspools. The health of the community will be improved and the fight of the health authorities for the suppression of contagion will be aided immeasurably. The delinquents are to have no choice, and they should have no choice. They must make their connections or be prosecuted. The good work cannot be started too quickly.

ROOSEVELT LECTURES INDIANS.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT is at present impartial with his lectures. He administers rebukes to United States senators, to generals who have grown gray in the service of their country, to high officials in government departments and to casual visitors with equal gusto. His latest victims were some Sioux Indians who strayed onto the White House reservation Wednesday. They went merely to gaze upon the countenance of the big paleface chief and to say "How" in the more or less friendly manner of their tribe.

Before they could get away they were treated to a dissertation on the evils of horse racing and gambling and the beauties of agricultural pursuits. An account says the Indians bore up with their usual stoicism. No matter how much you pain an Indian, you know, he never lets you know it. Not a groan escaped the red men as the president proceeded, and when he finished the Indians walked out smiling. When we think how much physical endurance was behind those smiles we cannot but admire the courage of the Indians.

They will go back to their reservation with the words of Roosevelt ringing in their ears—and they will devote as much time to gambling and horse racing, and as little to agriculture as ever they did. We thought President Roosevelt had lived long enough in the west to know that an Indian is about as susceptible to reason as an army mule. And maybe he does know it. Maybe he had had that lecture bottled up for a long time and had to work it off on somebody or burst. The Indians gave him his opportunity.

Understand, now, we don't question the soundness of the advice President Roosevelt gave those Indians. Gambling is wrong and horse racing is wrong, but the president must be hard set to find a way of breaking into the dispatches when he uses up his valuable time discouraging to Indians about evils that are the breath of life to them. He should confine himself exclusively to senators and public men, who can be made to understand that when Roosevelt says what is what it really is, and there's no getting around it.

SLAG FOR STREET WORK.

THE PROPOSITION by President Hewlett of the city council to have the city improve State street, from Fourth South street to the city limits at Tenth South street, by using slag in lieu of other road-building materials is being worth looking into. Slag roads, even in Salt Lake county, are not an experiment. They have been installed at several points by the county commissioners and, after several years of hard wear they are in first-class condition. The prospects are that they will continue in good shape for many years.

Those who have been over the road from Tenth South street to Murray say it is immeasurably superior to the street from Tenth South to Fourth Street, where the paved district begins. Farmers south of Tenth South say they would very much rather go to Murray to do their trading and dispose of their produce than to come to Salt Lake. The difference in price between the two places is more than offset by the struggle involved in getting a team and a loaded wagon through the mud of a city street.

It has been said, and with truth, unfortunately, that other city streets are in as bad condition as the section of State street to which reference has been made. But a beginning must be made somewhere. State street is one of the city's most important thoroughfares in that it affords ingress, when in good condition, to more county dwellers than any other street in Salt Lake. That it is all but impassable for two or three months in every year is altogether to the city's discredit.

Figures have been obtained that show that the cost of spreading slag over the huddy six blocks of State street would be between $4,000 and $5,000. This includes the covering of the slag with gravel to make it more springy. So constructed, the street will be as well suited for traffic in February and March as in July and August. An investigation into this question can do no harm and it may result in doing away with some burdensome conditions.

COL. CODY'S TROUBLES.

COLONEL WILLIAM F. CODY, known to the country as "Buffalo Bill," is not likely to win much sympathy in the west in his efforts to secure a divorce from the wife of his youth. Report has it that Cody has been going at that pace for a number of years and that he desires to travel still more rapidly, although he has reached an age when the pace a man goes tells on him. One of the grounds on which he seeks the divorce is an alleged attempt by his wife to poison him.

According to Cody's own story this attempt was made three years ago. He declares that the only reason his wife did not succeed in causing his death was that she gave him too much poison. Now the feature of this statement that strikes us as singular is that Cody waited so long a time before instituting his action for divorce. If the ordinary husband even vaguely suspected his wife of a desire to poison him he wouldn't live with her another day. And yet Cody continues to live with the woman for three years.

He may attempt to justify this on the ground that he is fond of excitement, accustomed to taking his life in his hands and cheerily venturing into the jaws of death. But three years of that sort of thing, three years of standing on a keg of gunpowder, as it were, while some reckless individual waved a lighted candle about it, would overstrain even Colonel Cody's widely advertised "iron nerve." We are inclined to think he has the iron nerve, all right, but its manifestation consists chiefly in this poison accusation against his wife.

Another feature of Cody's testimony is the statement that his wife refused to receive and entertain guests he took to their home at North Platte, Neb. Knowing Colonel Cody's penchant for fast company as some people in the west know it, it is not surprising that a decent woman, such as all accounts indicate Mrs. Cody to be, should refuse to extend any hospitality to certain friends of her husband. The home is peculiarly the domain of the wife.

If the husband must entertain friends whose character is open to question, he should entertain them away from home. Mrs. Cody had a perfect right to refuse to entertain them if they were objectionable to her, and Cody had no right to make her conduct the basis of a divorce suit.

Dispatches from the Orient indicate that China is preparing to side with Japan against Russia. If the Japs can only supply enough officers to whip the Chinese troops into shape Russia's finish is apparent. But if China helps Japan, France may help Russia, and then England will help Japan and China and we'll have a fight worth going a long way to see.

So our old friend Jake Greenwald is to be surveyor of customs for the port of Salt Lake. If Jake is made monarch of all he surveys in the customs line at this "port" he won't be much richer. By which we mean not that the new surveyor will not do all the surveying his job calls for, but that there won't be much surveying to do.

It looks as if the members of the Isthmian canal commission wouldn't have much to do except draw their salaries. This will doubtless be very satisfactory to the commissioners. It will also make some of the gentlemen who declined places on the commission when they hadn't.

There must be some mistake in the report of the latest victory won by American troops in the Philippines. The report makes no mention of the name of Major General Wood.

Why shouldn't the great political parties go to E. H. Herriman for vice presidential candidates. He has been making a number of vice presidents around here lately.

Word comes from Washington that the inquiry into the Smoot case will be exhaustive. It will be exhaustive, also, to a great many people who are deeply interested in it.

Proclaim the joy tidings throughout the land and to all the inhabitants thereof. The Salt Lake city council has held a harmonious meeting.

BREAKFAST FOOD SOCIETY

Cheer Up! If we never had a streak of fat, we wouldn't like the lean. If we never had dirt on the streets, we wouldn't like them clean. If we never had known poverty, we wouldn't like green wealth. If we never had been sick in bed, we wouldn't like our health. If we never had laughed long and loud, we wouldn't like to cry. If we never had had a speck of earth, we wouldn't like to die. If we never had kids in the world, we wouldn't like their toys. If we never had known any girls, we wouldn't like the boys. If we never had known any boys, we wouldn't like them tried. If we never had done time in jail, we wouldn't like outside.

The Man About Crazy. Here's another story: "Have you ever been present when the 'pin dropping' took place in the tabernacle?" inquired a well known citizen of The Man About Crazy. "Yes," how interesting! Well, do you know that pin doesn't make a sound at all. The man who drops it has a confederate who lets fall a big rock at the precise moment the pin hits the railing. It's all an optical illusion."

Here's another story: "Have you ever heard of the numerous subterranean passages underneath the streets of Salt Lake City?" inquired a well known citizen of The Man About Crazy. "Well, there are many miles of them. It has been popularly believed that they were built by the Mormons in the early days for the purpose of visiting their different homes by stealth and for the purpose of escaping the United States deputy marshals. It's no such thing, however. They were not built by the Mormons at all. They were excavated by the Digger Indians. The Digger Indians, you know, had a mania for digging. Whenever they camped they always dug tunnels, not for any specific purpose, but just for the sake of digging. A branch of the tribe camped one winter where Salt Lake City now stands and dug all these tunnels. A peculiar coincidence in this connection is that every tunnel approaches the surface at the exact spot where a saloon stood in early days."

Here's another story: "Did you ever know the precise date when this region ceased to be Mexican territory?" inquired a well known citizen of The Man About Crazy. "Well, it was in 1848, at the conclusion of the war with Mexico. A treaty was signed up in the spring of that year, but was not put on record until Governor Wells, then 5 years old, became city recorder, in 1848. It's hard to explain how the government got confused in its date."

It would be quite distressing, however, if the action of the "indictment" report should turn up and prove all that.

If used with judgment there is no reason why that German custom of confiscating certain books would not be a good thing on this side.
