OGDEN'S NEW DEPOT

Plans Have Been Submitted and Location Decided On.

Plans for the new Ogden Pacific freight depot were sent to Ogden five days ago and inspected by local officials, who have already made suggestions. It is understood that the depot will be located south of the Kiesel warehouse on the southern corner of Twenty-fourth street and Wall avenue.

But however difficult it may be to find out one's bearings at the Hub, it must be confessed that at every spoke in the wheel (for the ground plan is more nearly a wheel than a rectangle), one encounters the most nerve-soothing helps. No sort of courtesy is too much trouble for these high-proof Yankees, if thereby the traps are made to delightfully punctuate every corner within their borders.

No city in the United States nor in all the Americas is so replete with relics of the pregnant past as Boston. The bronze eagle of Beacon Hill perching on the summit of a lofty column broods forever over the story of Lexington and Concord. Naturally, with such events to care for, he seems just ready to fly into the heavens, for but not the fact of the sun being changed for us all by what he seems to see from his airy perch.

Commerce and the rush of twentieth century life have surged all around the gates of Kings Chapel, and the Park Street and Old South churches, all three standing with their colonial frontage within and without, while the ground which at their portals, ceases, for there the soil is crowded with the founders of the great republic. Josiah Franklin, but for whom Benjamin would not have been, and Morse remained unimagined; John Winthrop, Samuel Adams, Endicott, Josiah Quincy, for these and the host that bear them immortal company, Boston has recently said in stone and storied marble, "Let us forget that event the service of which we are to perform Monday morning at St. Joseph's Catholic church."

Salt Lake Woman Discusses Boston and Bostonians

By Mrs. John F. Hamilton.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 7.—One of the soul-stirring traditions of this grand city is that long before the revolution a self-seeking pig walked into his owner's house and tipped over a pailful of milk, which piece of impertinence so angered and surprised the mistress that she chased the pig until her breath gave out, and for her righteous conduct the village governors caused several streets to be laid out on the grandeur of the pig.

This legend may be true; the devious ways of Boston town point either to such an origin or to a snapshot on a streak of lightning as the history of the original pig.

But however difficult it may be to find out one's bearings at the Hub, it must be confessed that at every spoke in the wheel (for the ground plan is more nearly a wheel than a rectangle), one encounters the most nerve-soothing helps. No sort of courtesy is too much trouble for these high-proof Yankees, if thereby the traps are made to delightfully punctuate every corner within their borders.

JOKES A CENTURY OLD.

Some Still Going the Rounds of Comic Papers and Stump Speeches.

(Kansas City Journal.) What is regarded as the most valuable collection of ancient jokes in existence has just been presented to the Missouri State Historical society by W. H. Thompson of near Columbia. The chestnuts are in 168 volumes, one for each year since 1730.

In the almanac of 1804, now just a century old, considerable space is devoted to "original jokes, witty remarks and humorous anecdotes." Here are a few of the "very funny" things in the almanac of 1804:

"A dull judge of the inferior courts of a sister state, having attended to a variety of causes in the morning, went to dine at a friend's house with a most excellent appetite. Among the company was a witty barrister. The judge, eating very heartily of a dish of salmon, observed that he had filled himself so full that he needed hooping."

"Your honor is much more in want of hooping," replied the witty barrister.

"A professor, lecturing on heat, observed that one of its most conspicuous properties was the power of expanding all bodies. A humorous student rose and said: 'I have a question, professor, the days in warm weather are longer than those in cold?'"

"Mr. Harp and Mr. Fox had apartments in the same house, and each had frequent visits from the bailiffs. One morning, as he was looking out of his window, Mr. Fox saw two of them at the door. 'Pray, gentlemen,' said he, 'are you Fox hunting or Hare hunting this morning?'"

"Sir John Doyle, on being informed by a traveler that he had been in a country where the bugs were so large and fierce that they would eat a man's blood in a single night, humorously replied: 'My dear sir, we have similar animals in Ireland, but there we call them humpbugs.'"

"A man having been capitally convicted at Old Bailey was, as usual, asked what he had to say why judgment of death should not be passed on him. He replied, 'why, I think the joke has been carried far enough already, and the less said the better—if you please, we will drop the subject.'"

In a newly raised corps a soldier lately observed to his comrade, who was an Irishman, that a corporal was to be dismissed from his regiment. 'Faith and indeed,' said the Irishman, 'I hope it is the corporal who is so troublesome in our company.' 'What is his name?' replied the other. 'Why, corporal punishment, to be sure, replied Pat.'

A person who could not read a syllable took up a newspaper in a New York coffee house, and holding it upside down, pretended to peruse the ship advertisements on the first page, with great attention. 'What news?' inquired a bystander. 'There has been a great storm in the West Indies,' replied the reader, 'the vessels are all upset.'"

"A country squire asked a merry-andrew why he was playing the fool. 'For the same reason you do,' said he, 'out of want. You do it for want of wit, I for want of money.'"

Some of the jokes, humorous remarks, puns and witticisms which were perpetrated in the "Western Comic Almanac" in 1834 and which have not yet outlived their usefulness are the following:

"As a broker was folding some bank bills a wag observed: 'You must grow rich fast. I perceive you readily double your money.'"

"A poor country hawk, being detected in the act of shooting a butcher bird, was taken before a justice. 'So, fellow,' cried the justice, 'you see fit to shoot without a license, do you?' 'Oh, no, your honor,' said the offender. 'I have a license for hawking.' So saying he handed his peddler's license, and the bird shot being a hawk, he was discharged."

"When Mr. Alexander Gun was discharged from the Edinburgh custom house the entry made against his name was: 'A. Gun, discharged for making a false report.'"
