LADY CURZON.

Monday the body of an American girl who had aided her husband in ridding over 200,000,000 people was laid in its final resting-place in England. Upon her coffin were placed wreaths from the president of the United States, the king of England, the prince of Wales and many other notable world figures. The girl was the daughter of an American merchant who started in life with nothing but his energy and his ability for capital and won his way to a fortune far beyond the wildest dreams of his youth.

How pleasant it is to be able to record the fact that this American girl, when she was called upon to rule, ruled as one to the manner born. Behind her was no long line of aristocratic ancestors, no divine-right heritage, nothing of the divinity that hedges royalty about. The hands of her father, her father's father and his father, as far back as the lineage of the family was ever traced, were the hard hands of honest toilers. If Levi Z. Letter had been born in some countries he would have been held always in lowly station, his children could never have hoped to cross the gulf between the classes.

The marriage of Miss Letter to George Curzon was called a love match. Their wedded life was said to have been ideally happy. There is reason to believe in the truth of these assertions, for scandal is ever ready to smirch the lives of the great and the successful, always on the watch for any foundation upon which to build a structure of malicious gossip. There was nothing of this about the Curzons. George Curzon was comparatively an obscure man when he won his wife. There was no hint of the purchase of a title with money.

He became Lord Curzon of Kedleston long after the ceremony was said. His wife's money doubtless was a material help in the advancement that came to him, but her winsome personality, her ready tact, her rare intelligence were more helpful than money could possibly have been. The English are not a good-natured people. They do not view with favor the assumption of high stations in their country by foreigners. Yet there has not been one to say an unkind word of the dead Lady Curzon, the American girl who was the vicereine of India, the girl who occupied a place second only to that of England's queen.

With one accord the newspapers of England and the English public have joined in praise of Lady Curzon. She did well the work that came to her hand. Every American was proud of her; every American had reason to be. May the rest that has come to her in the grave be as peaceful as her reward is sure.

UNIONS IN POLITICS.

The labor unions of the United States are going into politics. The fiat has gone forth from the American Federation of Labor, the governing body of the trades unions; the manifesto, signed by President Gompers, Vice President John Mitchell and other members of the executive committee, has been issued. Members of trades unions everywhere in the country are urged to organize for political battles. They are expected to nominate candidates from their own membership where they have a chance to elect them, and in other districts they are urged to bring about the nomination, if possible, of men who are friendly to the unions. The program is country wide.

The executive committee of the federation clearly appreciates the dangers that accompany or flow out of participation in politics by labor unions. "This movement must not degenerate into a scramble for office," says the committee. "It should be a determined effort, free absolutely from partisanship of every name and character, to secure the legislation we deem necessary and essential to the welfare and happiness of all our people. As the present objects of this movement are purely in the line of legislation, all efforts should be concentrated upon the election of members of congress and the various state legislatures."

Generally speaking, the surest way to disrupt any organization that is not purely political is to inject politics into it. In nearly every instance in which it has been tried disaster has followed. Men of all shades of political belief belong to labor unions. In the membership roll are found Democrats, Republicans, Socialists, Populists, Prohibitionists. The test of labor-union membership has never been a political test. Of course, nobody disputes the right of the labor unions to go into politics. It is only the wisdom of the plan that is in question.

Gompers, Mitchell and the other leaders are honest in their desire for the advancement of union labor's interests. That much is certainly true. They would not do anything that, in their judgment, would in any way hurt the cause they have for years ably upheld. They felt sure they were right before they went ahead. Only time can determine whether or not they really were right. In the meanwhile the experiment will be watched with a great deal of interest. As a solid body the labor-union men are capable of wielding a powerful influence on the politics of the United States. They are a force that must be given serious consideration.

RIGHTS OF AUTOMOBILISTS.

Complaint has reached The Herald that in various parts of Salt Lake City hoodlums are in the habit of throwing stones at passing automobiles and the occupants of the car. The other day a prominent citizen was struck in the head by a stone about the size of a hen's egg, and had it not been for the thick cap he was wearing, he might have been seriously injured. The hoodlum, a hulking boy apparently 15 years old, escaped. Similar instances have been reported. One of the handsomest automobiles in the city shows a great dent where the gasoline tank was all but cut through by a boulder thrown by a boy.

It is not possible to condone offenses of this character. They are entirely too serious. Anybody who has had experience with automobiles, either in driving them or riding in them will readily appreciate the danger attendant on even the slightest injury to the individual at the steering wheel. Even if the car is traveling at a low rate of speed a blow from a stone must inevitably disconcert the driver. It might cause him to swerve the machine into a telephone or power pole, into the curb or some other obstruction and cause the death or serious injury of the occupants of the vehicle.

The automobilist has rights as well as the walking or horse-driving public. He is entitled to all reasonable protection. If any boy or man throwing stones at passing automobiles can be caught he should be prosecuted for assault and an example made of him. If this is not done, there is going to be a mighty serious accident some day in Salt Lake City. The stone-throwers cannot be too quickly caught and taught that they must stop the practice they have been engaging in so freely.

HARNESSING NEPTUNE.

Now it is the ocean that is to be harnessed to serve men. Apparatus whereby the waves can be harnessed to machines, and made to furnish motive power for all human needs is promised shortly to be perfected by an enthusiastic inventor. The invention, as described in a glowing writeup, consists of one or more barges launched upon the sea and anchored at a distance from the shore so as to insure deep water at all times. Here the apparatus can, it is stated, be operated in every sort of weather. Along the bottom of each barge runs a metal track upon which are two little cars, one at each end, bearing weights. The cars are connected by a rod, and as the boat rocks they roll back and forth along the track, at the same time operating a pair of pistons which compress air, and through a tube furnish pneumatic power operating machinery upon shore. The pumping mechanism may also be adjusted to suck water from under the boat and pipe it to shore in a steady stream with sufficient force to operate a water motor on the beach.

Should this invention prove to be practicable, it will go a long way toward solving the problem of power for manufacturers and every other purpose, for electricity generated on the seacoast could be transmitted long distances to the point where needed with but trifling loss in transmission.

The Czar and General Trepoff are, according to a dispatch from St. Petersburg, under the guidance of a spiritualistic medium. If this is true they are likely to lose their faith in mediums, and their heads, within a very brief period of time.
