

The social dullness of the present time is accounted for in a variety of ways. One of the most delightful of hostesses asked how she could afford to announce a series of events when stocks had declined, and there was no ready money on hand. The questioner had overlooked evidently the real grace of entertaining, and, poor soul, had thought that hospitality and money were absolute complements, the one of the other. There are many ideal hostesses in this city alone who could show her that the one is not dependent on the other; while a moment's thought given to the very wealthy would show that they are by no means interdependent. There may be less of lavishness and of extravagance, but the people who are true social, who really care to have their friends, will never give up entertaining them either because of lack of large funds or because of their friends' indebtedness to them.

One of the richest stories now agitating a fashionable church is that told of the contributions of one wealthy family toward a recent "rubbish" sale. The tale is too lurid in its fulness for the columns of a daily "family" paper, but some of the items will bear mention. As per list: One parasol which, having seen service, was split from the topmost point to the outer edge in three several places; two pink satin slippers (for the good of the poor), of assorted sizes, i. e., one for a size 3 foot and the other for a size 8; two vases, broken on one side; three photographs of mamma's darling boys in football suits, and some more junk not usually found even at rubbish sales.

All the gayeties of the past week have been on the simple order, due largely to the old-fashioned Halloween idea, emanating as it does from the country places of the old world. Staid society folk have forgotten their reserve and have entered most heartily into the frolics of the younger people, and a dance in the barn or a gay frolic in a kitchen garden has been as much enjoyed by the sedate as by the youngsters themselves. A rather funny incident is related of the late return made by the club women on the last night of the convention recently held. The train pulled into the depot at near midnight, and deposited a large parcel of tired women. Of course husbands of assorted sizes and colors were on hand, but there was one who had taken wife at her word, and had gone quietly to bed. She looked around her with expectancy in every feature, and then she said, "Well, I told him not to come to the train; but, of course, I thought he would."

Still another bridge club is in process of formation, this time a bunch of the youngest and fairest of the society girls gathering for the weekly game. They do say there are to be no cash stakes, and the older girls whose losses are not light these days, are scornful of the outcome. One of the younger matrons is to superintend the affair and the first meeting will be held with her.

Women's Clubs.

The past week has been full of interest for club women throughout the state, having witnessed the largest and in point of accomplishment, the most important convention of the state federation ever held in the state. The fact that the club women reported an expenditure of nearly $1,000 for the unfortunate boys of Canyon Crest is in itself something of which they may well be proud. But in addition to that they voted unanimously to make special effort for the teachers of the Y. W. C. A. which means a substantial bit of growth for that worthy cause. They endorsed the movement of the teachers for the state's aid in pensioning school teachers, and decided to appoint a committee to co-operate with the teachers in all their efforts to get a more satisfactory arrangement of the present law and to get a real fund started instead of taxing the teachers still further. Indeed, they did much, not so much along lines of self-culture and self-help, but along lines of helpfulness for the state and its dependents. The three club women who will work with the teachers for the success of the pension movement are Mrs. A. J. Gorham of the Ladies' Literary society, Miss Rose Pollock of the Monday Night club, and Mrs. F. S. Richards of the Utah Woman's Press club.

One of the most beautiful tributes that could be paid to a retiring officer was that tendered Mrs. C. S. Kinney Thursday evening at the closing meeting of the convention in Ogden, when the gravel with which she has presided for the past four years was presented to her. Mrs. Mary M. F. Allen of Park City made the presentation, and accompanied the gift with a wealth of roses and the most cordial wishes of the federation.

The regular meeting of the Woman's Athenaeum of Park City was held Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. L. E. Hubbard. An amendment to the constitution, which provides that the delegates elected to attend the various club meetings shall have all of their expenses paid by the club, was voted on and carried. Mrs. Lecompte led the lesson. Mrs. Arthur Williams and Mrs. Hubbard both had readings from "The Old Curiosity Shop." Mrs. M. M. F. Allen then read a paper on "Quilp." The next meeting will be with Mrs. John Dem at her home on Monday next.

At the next meeting of the Ladies' Literary club, to be held next Friday, the program will be as follows: "The Social and Economic Condition of Paris." Mrs. Marcy will give a paper on "The First American," and the music will be furnished by Miss Edna Bailey and Miss Romania Hyde.

A meeting of the art section of the Ladies' Literary club will be held at the club house next Thursday at 10:15. Mrs. Delano will give the topic, "Romanesque Architecture."

The Wasatch Literary club will meet with Mrs. Rodgers and Mrs. Gorline at the home of Mrs. Rodgers, Fifteenth East, between Eleventh and Twelfth South, on Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 5, at 2 o'clock.

The Cleopatra meets on Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Thomas Sloan. Mrs. W. D. Ritter will give a paper on "The Social and Economic Condition of Paris."

The tourist section of the Ladies' Literary club meets Tuesday morning. Mrs. Webber will present the topic, which is on Persian architecture.

Gossard Models Designed for The Charlton Shop Latest in Corsets Is Lacing in Front

This Places the Fit in Hands of the Wearer and Not Out of Sight as in the Old Styles.

HIPS ARE HELD IN SNUGLY

Corsetieres are being held responsible for grace, for style and for hygiene among those who follow artistic dressing. Corset-making is unquestionably an art and one that involves a knowledge of the human figure, its comfort and dictates of modistes.

An intelligent comprehension of these facts has evolved remarkable corsets and the effort to fit the individual. The latest step in corset evolution calls into practice the principle of lacing in front, which practically places the fit and agreeable features of the corset out of sight, which usually leads to being out of mind.

The front-lacing corset may be so regulated that the hips are held snugly and the abdomen supported, while the tender region of the diaphragm is protected. The spine is guarded by skillfully placed bones and goes that make a smooth back and a straight, erect line.

Under the influence of the same lacing, the line under the arm is held close to the body, and the bust forms in the normal position where it should be.

Rival inventions of interest. Corsetieres are scientific tailors and the rival inventions are of interest to anyone who enjoys scientific work. Still another corset gains its flexibility and adjustment to the figure by the aid of vertical rows of elastic insertion in front, a device that has distinctive merits. The straight front, while not so widely advertised, is secure in favor. It does not need advertising, because its merits have been recognized and its principles are applied in the front-laced corset and in those which have elastic insets.

The front-laced corset is designed to give perfect freedom to the respiratory organs. In the more successful models from different shops a clever employment of the hips gives a particularly graceful curve to the waistline. The long-waisted front, cut moderately low in the bust and deep on the hips, with a judicious boning under the arms, is bound to give a smart appearance.

None of the correct shapes gives compression to the stomach, but distributes its support in a most admirable manner by ligues and bones that hold the construction of the human figure.

Corsets for the Athletic Woman. The tendency of society women to play golf, take long walks and to enjoy athletic exercise has created the sports' corset—really a flexible corset.

Should Be Light in Weight.

It is exceedingly important that a corset should be light in weight. Genuine whalebone is much lighter than any of its substitutes, and a thin, firm material stands as much service as the heavier, harsher materials.

White Coultie, cream white batiste, and the materials in pale blue and pale pink are usually found. Silk, tulle, brocades and much-decorated fabrics, really very tempting, are used in the expensive models.

Little lines mark the fashionable figure of the winter. Everyone too plump is trying to reduce hips and this is accomplished by exercise and good corsets. The dear corset is usually better cut and better fitting, and if one is at all particular regarding the figure it is worth the investment in a high-priced corset.

It may be observed that low-priced articles are not only a cheaper quality of material, but that the shapes are not so artistic nor so exact. The cheap shoe, the cheap glove, the cheap stocking, the cheap corset, the cheap coat are cut along clumsy lines, not with intent, but because in fitting the multitude the proportions must be flexible to admit various shapes.

Has Been Designed by Experts. The higher-priced article has been designed by more expensive persons, the lines of grace are taken into account as well as the lines of proportion. It is a pity that those who must buy cheaper articles cannot get beauty at the same time—but beauty is high-priced.

Returning to corsets, the white corset is always in better taste than the colored one, and time should be taken, a half day need be, to pick out a good fitting corset that will fit under the arms as well as about the hips and give the wearer a flat back and a straight front. It is not the straight front of the past, but a more sensible fit that holds the abdomen in check.
