

WOULD IMPROVE VACATION TIME

Hours and Days Should Not Be Merely Frittered Away Without Aim or Purpose.

SOME MARVELS OF NATURE OPPORTUNITY FOR ALL TO ENJOY THEMSELVES.

The Rev. L. S. Bowerman, pastor of the East Side Baptist church, spoke on a topic last evening that is timely at this hour. He discussed the subject of vacation, a question which is uppermost in the minds of a large proportion of the population, not only of Salt Lake, but as well of all the land.

Dr. Bowerman maintained that vacation time should not be frittered away in mere idle loafing, but that vacation should be taken advantage of as an opportunity for improvement. Many practical suggestions for nature study and communion were contained in the sermon. In substance, Dr. Bowerman said, taking for his text Acts 2:11: "Because he would not spend the time in Asia; for he had to go to Jerusalem to be at Jerusalem at the day of Pentecost."

Time is Precious. "Because he would not spend the time" is a very suggestive phrase and especially so when you look into its meaning. The original word means "to rub things together, so that they will fall apart by bits," "fritter away." Paul would not rub or fritter away his time by stopping at Ephesus, he purposed being in Jerusalem at a certain date.

"Time" has well been said to be the material out of which life is made. It is being frittered away or used constructively. A vacation ought in some way to fit into the purpose of a man's life. It is not time to be simply frittered or "rubbed away."

Change of Attention. "Vacation means a change, a rest; the rest is not cessation of activity, but a change of attention. The directing of mind or hand in another direction, that is not the thing of a single day; but of days and weeks. The average picnic or Sunday outing is slight, and is not a vacation in any sense a vacation, and certainly not restful either to mind or body.

"Nature, however, in near and her wonders many. Flora, fauna, birds and insects, changeless hills and changing sea. Marvels of peak and wonders of cave. In schools and conferences are great possibilities. Not for the student merely, he needs something else. But for those unable to keep up because of the pressure of life, these schools furnish some of the best opportunities for genuine vacation, combining the mental and physical. We trust that the day is not distant when a splendid school of the Chautauqua type may be established near our city."

ALLEN'S ROAD PULLS TOGETHER

Secret of Success in Financial and Business Way Is Explained by Orson Hewlett.

MOFFAT ROAD IS COMING WILL EXPEND MILLIONS TO SHORTEN ROUTE.

"It was a revelation to me, I say, a revelation," said Orson H. Hewlett, who returned at 6:30 o'clock last evening after attending the national convention of credit men at Denver, there was a pessimist in the bunch; they were all optimists. I never did dream of such pulling together as those of the population. They are all pulling for Denver as much as they are for their own home towns, and Denver is pulling for them. They have a system down here where the big fellow pulls along the little fellow. They are all for Denver and Colorado.

Systematic Co-operation. "In Denver they have a splendid organization of business men. When any proposition comes up that should be attended to it takes the form of a committee to get a group of the most prominent business men together—it doesn't take any time to do this, and it is, indeed, the very best of things. It is not a stop to our catering and hair-pulling."

Denver feels friendly toward Salt Lake. Every word I heard spoken in respect to this city was a word of praise. Everywhere Salt Lake has come to be regarded as a city of surpassing beauty. I was surprised at the effect the newspaper advertising has had. It was, indeed, "Denver is progressive and is progressing. It is true that there is little building on business blocks, but new residences are going up without number. The White City, five miles from Denver, is a magnificent resort. It was built at a cost of half a million dollars, and to show you what scale it is planned, one million lights are used in the scheme. Everything is perfect in its way. All the arrangements and the appointments are without flaw or failure."

Freight Rate Bureau. "By observing a strict policy of pulling together, the business men's associations of Colorado have succeeded in securing freight rates that are fairer than that in any other state. I was told by one of the prominent traffic managers that the railroads were always ready to listen to requests for lower rates when radical departures were asked for the railroads turned them down in short order."

Coming to Salt Lake. "In about two months there will be a big delegation of Colorado business men in Salt Lake for a trip through this state, Idaho and Wyoming. Monday a delegation of 30 from Ohio will be in Salt Lake. Preparations have been made for their entertainment at the Commercial club, Saltair and at a special organ recital at the laboratory."

The Moffat Road. "One of the things of great significance that I learned in Denver was the fact that the Moffat road is surely coming to Salt Lake, and that speedily. Six million dollars has already been devoted to the purpose of driving a tunnel through the mountains at a lower level than the grade of the road at present. This line will be completed in 1910. The Moffat road will carry traffic, while the sky line, which is 12,000 feet in the air, will be maintained as a scenic route."

The Lake delegates made a great hit with their decorations. We had a beautiful red badge, and each had tiny bouquets of salt labeled "Salt from Great Salt Lake." Everybody wanted a bottle as a souvenir."

The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Howland, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Griffith, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Galagher, Joseph Johnson and George Roster of the R. G. Union agency.

FAMILEARY APPLES HIS BRANDING IRON TO 1300 YEARLINGS

Enough Excitement to Patch Hades Two Miles, According to Old Man Warren—Bonneville Correspondent Kicks Over the Traces.

(Special to The Herald.) Bonneville, Utah, June 28.—Old man Warren says he knew an old snooter in Holbrook, Ariz., whose advertising was built on signboards facing the railroads in lines which, to say the least, were designed to attract the attention of the eastern tourist passing by on Pullman trains. It consisted of a "genera" all-around mess of squalling calf, sizzling iron, profane comment, dust and deviltry. The Sabbath was broken in six places on the Bonneville corner. The yearlings came from southern Utah. Most of them were purchased from Jim Leary's range, which starts near Ogden, a station on the Salt Lake railroad, and reaches over toward the Arizona line. They are consigned to Ora A. Haley at Wamsutter, Wyo., where they are going, fifty-four to a car, this afternoon.

Their stay in Bonneville was merely in the nature of a little sojourn to break the monotony of the journey. The law not allowing cattle to remain in transit for more than twenty-eight hours; and to get their new coats of paint, the shape of the Double Bar brand, with which Ora Haley adorns his stock. The brand of the Double Bar is comparatively simple, consisting of merely two parallel lines burned across the left flank, and consequently the boys at the yard were able to identify the animals by their record. The batch was branded at the rate of about 150 per hour.

It was pretty hot work for six pretty fallow men, who started near Ogden, the little breeze which had been clearing away the dust had died down and the sun shined down like a red-hot iron. The hills across the valley, the work which had begun in meridian and just in the cool small hours began to be what one of the boys called "a red-hot iron." When they were all branded and loaded—meaning the yearlings—the outfit beat it to the hotel. The Stockyard in a very subdued and tired manner. Jim Leary, who did the actual branding of the brands, had a special engine to take him to the Stockyard, but a man couldn't be dragged from the hotel.

"It ain't so swell to look at," he said, "and it hasn't any name beyond what"

COLLECTION OF PAINTINGS IS NOW ON EXHIBITION

The William Morris collection of paintings is now on exhibition at the Walker Bros. dry goods store. In this noted collection a number of distinguished artists are represented. W. L. Norton, marine painter, has three examples of his work of the coast of Greenland. One represents a whaling ship at night, another a boat on the ice, and a third a boat on the ice. J. T. Harwood, a local artist, has several examples of his work in the collection. One is a landscape, another a portrait, and another a landscape. The collection is well represented by the work of the local artists. The collection is well represented by the work of the local artists.

Another painting by this artist, called "A Surprise," represents a fishing schooner at anchor on the Grand banks in a fog. The ship is a large Atlantic liner, and is seen through the fog. She is in the direct line of the schooner, but just at the critical moment the fog lifts a little and the schooner is seen. A disaster is averted. The sun is just breaking through the mist. Mr. Norton has managed the light in a manner that seems magical. The sun illumines the fog in a manner that makes it semi-transparent, like a light veil which one sees through. The general tone of the picture is a delightful gray. The water is in the same general key of color and the picture might well be called a symphony in gray.

A painting called the "Potter," by Irving Coure, represents an Indian potter, who is contemplating a piece of pottery. The light is in the shade of the cave, for that is where he evidently has his workshop, and is reflected on the nude body of the decorator. The skillful drawing of the figure and the exquisite color of the subject is delightful. The mental quality of the artist as he contemplates the design of the vase is also well described. The picture is a wonderfully interesting theme and has a historical as well as an artistic value, for one feels that Indians, with their legends and characters, are fast passing away and will appear mythical in the perspective of generations to come. There should be in every American household an example of Indian life, which is so intimately associated with our national life. Mr. Coure

De Hoog, the well known Dutch painter, has a beautiful little genre subject in the collection called "Pouring the Tea." It represents the interior of a Dutch cottage, where the mother is pouring tea. The interior is simply furnished. There is a plain table in the center of the room. A subdued light, which is well distributed, is delightfully managed. The figures of both mother and child are well characterized. It is a beautiful illustration of a member of this same family, which is one of the gems of the collection. Berne Bellcour has a characteristic subject in the exhibit, "A Soldier on Picket." The subject is one which is very familiar to this artist. He is a military painter of the highest order. He was a distinguished student of Meissonier and has the characteristics of that military period. He is the officer of the Legion of Honor.

"The High Sierras," by W. T. Jackson, is a very impressive landscape. The spectator stands at the head of a deep canyon, looking through and beyond to the distant mountain, that is partially covered by clouds. The distant peak is in broad light and the motion of the clouds is well felt. The canyon is partially in shadow and partially in light. The shadow is very transparent, full of air, so to speak. There is an element of grandeur in the picture, which is one of the strongest paintings of this character that has ever been shown in the west. Mr. Jackson has another sample of his work in the collection, called "An Approach to the Yosemite." The picture is beautiful in tone and very rich in color. Technically speaking it is very strong in the handling. The texture of the rocks is firm and satisfying. The tree drawing is free and powerful. The entire composition is fascinating and will be a very impressive feature of the collection.

Van der Nacker, a Belgian animal painter of distinction, has a painting of cats on view. It is one of the strongest in the collection. As a painter of cats this artist cannot be surpassed. It is impossible to do justice to the collection in one article. The public has a treat in store in the contemplation of this varied and interesting collection.

FRANK H. HYDE DES SUDDENTLY

Veteran of Indian Wars Succumbs to an Attack of Apoplexy.

Frank H. Hyde died suddenly yesterday afternoon at 12:45 o'clock of apoplexy. Mr. Hyde was the eldest son of the late Apostle Orson Hyde and Marinda Johnson Hyde, and was born sixty-two years ago at New York. For many years he was a trusted employe of the Pacific Express company. Mr. Hyde leaves a widow and six children. His children are Mrs. J. J. Sears, Mrs. A. H. Ensign, Miss Dorritt Hyde, Orson Hyde, Frank H. Hyde and Tracy Hyde, at 24 F street. The funeral services are to be held Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. H. Ensign, at 24 F street. In early manhood Mr. Hyde took part in the Indian wars in Utah. Although a man of quiet and gentle demeanor, his services at those times were remembered for their display of daring and gallantry. Later he served as a Mormon missionary in Great Britain for three and a half years. Returning to Utah in 1870, he entered the service of the Wells-Fargo Express company, and later became identified with the Pacific Express company, with which company he remained in a position of Stock company for many years. He was a man who had many friends.

FIRE IN LOUVE FAILS TO STOP CASH REGISTER

"The Louvre is burning." The cry did not mean that the great art collection of Paris was imperiled, but that the men and women at the tables and the cash registers were in danger. As the engines and trucks of the fire department rattled through the streets, there was a night about 9 o'clock there were many ejaculations. "Nevada miner, burning up money. Has set fire to the Louvre," shouted one. "Nay, not so," exclaimed another. "The sparklers of a member of the Orpheum Stock company have started this awful holocaust." Stalwart youths leaped down the stairs of the Louvre, three at a time, to first to seize undamaged fair ladies and bear them safely to the sidewalk. But when the cafe was reached, it was discovered that the men and women at the tables were serenely munching their pate de gras and chatting, the orchestra was playing and even anon the cash register rang bravely.

Even when the firemen and a few perspiring policemen rushed in, the people in the Louvre did not get excited. Ebon waiters calmly escorted the fire-fighters to the kitchen, where it was discovered that the chef, in using gasoline for something or other about the range, had started a smudge. But he was deep in the mysteries of some new sort of omelette and had no time to flee for safety. So the chemists and poets where it would do the most good and then the firemen and the policemen withdrew. No damage worth mentioning.
