INSTRUCTORS END WORK AT OGDEN

Elect Officers and Pass Resolutions of Thanks for Many Courtesies Extended.

At 12:30 o'clock noon yesterday the eighteenth triennial convention of the American Instructors of the Deaf came to a close in this city, after a session lasting a week. The last session of the convention might rightly be called a love feast. Resolution after resolution was adopted and each contained words of appreciation of the many kindnesses shown upon the delegates during their stay in this city and Salt Lake. Before bringing the convention to a close, the delegates unanimously voted the Ogden meeting the greatest in the history of the organization. The place for the next convention has not been named, but will be selected by the officers and board of directors some time later.

Dr. E. M. Gallaudet of Washington, D. C., who has held the position of president of the association, but who was unable to attend the Ogden convention on account of illness, was unanimously chosen to succeed himself. Dr. J. R. Boyens of Mississippi was elected vice president; Professor Percival Hall of Washington, secretary, and J. S. Long of Iowa, treasurer. The board of directors for the next three years will be E. McK. Goodwin of North Carolina, Professor F. M. Driggs of Utah and R. O. Johnson of Indiana.

Reports Are Received.
At the usual hour yesterday morning, President E. McK. Goodwin, who has presided over the convention during the absence of President Gallaudet, called the convention to order for the final session. The work of the oral section was taken up and finished. Reports of several officers were received. These showed the organization to be in a flourishing condition. Following these reports, invitations for the holding of the next convention in their respective cities were received from Belleville, Ontario, and Delevan, Wis. E. D. Cameron, superintendent of education, of Oklahoma, who came into town from Denver the evening previous, addressed the gathering briefly. At the conclusion of his remarks, Mr. Cameron was made an honorary member of the convention, being chosen by acclamation.

Rev. H. D. Zimmerman, Governor John C. Cutler, Superintendent of Instruction A. C. Nelson, Dr. W. G. Anderson, Miss Ida S. Dusenberg.
Immediately following the close of the meeting, the delegates began preparing to leave for their homes in all parts of the United States and Canada. Professor F. M. Driggs and Mrs. Driggs headed a party of fifty that started for a month's trip to Yellowstone park last evening. Most of the delegates, however, went directly to their homes.

Rev. Percival Hall of Washington, D. C., secretary of the association, before catching his train for the east, stated to The Herald:
"We have had a glorious time. The convention has been one of the most instructive we have ever held, and I cannot speak too highly of the hospitality of the people of Ogden and Salt Lake. Every delegate to the convention will return home an ardent booster for Ogden and Utah."

MYSTERIOUS DEATH.

Preparations for Burial of Woman Stopped by Coroner.
Chicago, July 10.—Preparations for the burial of Mrs. Amanda Wentz were stopped by the coroner yesterday and the woman's husband, Cornelius Eugene Wentz, a cook, was placed in custody pending the investigation of the woman's sudden death.

The evidence which resulted in the move was furnished the police by two women friends of Mrs. Wentz. They said she had requested them three weeks ago to ask the police to investigate her death if she should die suddenly. Mrs. Wentz, according to their story, said she feared her husband was trying to kill her to hide evidence of his mistreatment of her 12-year-old stepdaughter, Elsie Loewer.
Elsie Loewer told the police that her stepfather brought her some cakes before they retired Wednesday night. She said her mother was the only one who ate of the cakes. Wentz and his wife are said to have quarreled frequently on account of his stepdaughter.

More About the American Flag

In spite of the fact that the American flag appears to require an extraordinary number of affidavits in substantiation of its birth, why it is, and how it is, whence it came and who is the author of it, the American flag floats calmly and peacefully proud on the breeze, letting out its folds in graceful succession as though it cared not who made it, named it or cradled it; knowing only that it is supreme in its majesty—and who shall say it is not?

Recently there has been more or less controversy about the question of the identity of the person who named the American flag "Old Glory." There lives in this city Mr. Driver, whose father, Captain W. L. Driver, is asseverated to have been the first to name the flag "Old Glory." The claim to this distinction is made in forms of affidavits by a daughter of the respectable captain and the flag is exhibit A.

Now they are having a lively time with the flag that Betsy Ross made or did not make. Sworn statements have been brought forward to prove that Betsy did make the first flag, and that the story of her being the first is the most important fact in the history of the flag. The story of the American flag goes merely on in one of its phases or another. The Fletcher statement is:
"I remember having heard my mother, Elizabeth Claypole, say frequently that she was the first to name the flag 'Old Glory.' She said her mother was the only one who ate of the cakes. Wentz and his wife are said to have quarreled frequently on account of his stepdaughter."

"I remember to have also heard her say that it was made on the order of a committee, of whom Colonel John Ross was one member, and that General Washington, acting in conference with the committee, ordered with them at her house. (Here follows a long description of the well known flag house on Arch street. That it was in the month of June, 1776, or shortly before the Declaration of Independence, that the committee called on her.)

BILL NYE AS AN ORATOR.

Humorist Joked With Such Good Effect He Saved the Day.

(Leroy T. Vernon in Chicago News.)
"The only time I ever heard Bill Nye make a political speech there wasn't a line of politics in it, but it did the business," said Congressman Frank M. Nye, a brother of the humorist, to a group of friends at the Washington Press club.
"Bill Nye came to visit me once in Minneapolis, about twelve years ago, while he was making a western trip. Senator Nelson was governor of Minnesota then, and Joel P. Heatwole, who served in congress from 1885 to 1902, was running for election in the Third district.
"Governor Nelson had been billed to talk at a town in the Third district, but at the last moment it was deemed advisable to have him appear in Minneapolis, where the fight was getting hot. The state committee picked me out to fill the Third district engagement, and without knowing what I was getting into I prepared for the trip."
"My brother dropped into Minneapolis just an hour or so before I was ready to leave town. I hadn't seen him for about seven years, and I compromised the demand for party loyalty and brotherly devotion by inducing him to come along with me. We had the train journey and the night to visit in, and looked for no untoward circumstances to interrupt our visit.
"We hadn't pulled into the depot yards of the Third district town before we saw trouble ahead of us. The magic name of the governor had been a loadstone. Excursions from every part of the district had been run into the town, and there awaiting the chief executive was a reception committee, prominent citizens in carriages and a section of a band.
"To say that the reception committee was disappointed would be to characterize its state of mind too simply. It was 'put out,' to say the least, and it did not attempt to conceal the fact. It heaped reproaches upon the governor for disappointing such an aggregation of loyal voters, and upon the state committee for sending such a poor substitute to keep his engagements.
"For a time I thought that Bill and I were going to get anything but eat. I told the chairman of the committee that it wasn't my fault and that if he'd give us something to eat and then take us around to the hall we'd try our best to satisfy the people.
"I'm ready to make quite a speech myself," I modestly said, "and my brother, Bill Nye, is here, and when I get through maybe he will consent to say something." This didn't seem to impress the chairman much and he showed no interest in the name of Bill Nye. But we were taken to a good hotel and enjoyed an excellent dinner, and when the committee came to escort us around to the hall we were both ready to attempt the pacification of the outraged voters.
"The opening of that meeting was not distinctly in our favor. The chairman rose with a grave face and graveyard tone, which they all must feel over the failure of Governor Nelson to keep the engagement to address them. He stated this again, in a different way, and again and again, until the feeling of depression began to settle on us, too.
"We have with us Mr. Nye of Minneapolis," said the chairman, "who has been billed by the state committee to speak to us on the issues of the campaign and we will listen to him shortly. And there is also here," he added, as an apparent afterthought, "Mr. Nye's brother—I believe he is called Bill Nye—and he may add a few words."
"I saw some of the people down in the audience begin to prick up their ears, as though the name of Bill Nye was ear-
