HAVE THEY CHANGED THEIR MINDS?

Observing people are a good deal interested in the question: "How long will a reformer stay put?" A little while ago certain gentlemen of this city were very angry about the stockade. They condemned it with the strongest speech of which they were capable. They demanded its extinction, and the police turned a deaf ear to them. They proclaimed the badness of it, and the mayor begged to differ with them. He held the stockade to be a good thing. The gentlemen opposed to the stockade were called reformers; and did not disown the title. They clamored in every ward of the city. They held meetings. They raised money and hired lawyers. They prepared petitions, and many of their followers openly threatened the use of dynamite in the destruction of that stockade which the police defended, and the mayor indorsed and advocated. They set the city in a turmoil.

Because of their fight against the stockade the community was so aroused that the sheriff and the county commissioners responded to the demand for the enforcement of the law. There was no hope for law enforcement from the police, because the mayor was the advocate of the unlawful thing. And the mayor would not permit his policemen to enforce civilization's edict against the abomination.

For the first time in the history of this city, for one of the rare times in the whole history of any state, the county authorities responded to the loud and constant demand of the reformers, and did the work the police refused to do. Sheriff and county commissioners devoted themselves to enforcing the law in the city. The county spent money. The reformers helped them. Men of high character and clean morals bought beer for bad women, and prepared evidence that could be used in the destruction of the stockade.

And now some of the very leaders of that reform movement are out in unqualified indorsement of John Bransford for mayor—THE FATHER OF THE STOCKADE! Wherefore the question: "How long will a reformer stay put?" Have they changed their minds? Do they now believe right what they believed wrong a year ago? Were they mistaken when they filled the courts with litigation?

Was Mayor Bransford right when he bounced honest Tom Pitt because he would not disobey and defy the law? Was he right when he chose another chief whose one qualification was that he held the commands of the mayor above the law of the land? If so, then the gentlemen who were so strong against the stockade in 1908 should go to the logical conclusion, and publish as broadly their present sentiments as they published then. They should tell to the world that they were mistaken; that the stockade is a right thing; that they regretted having accepted the money of the citizens who didn't want a stockade; that they apologize for filling the courts with vain and unnecessary contention; that they had no warrant for setting the citizens in contention; and that they unite with all friends of the stockade plan in an invitation for the Belle of Ogden to return and resume her sway.

For they have boldly announced their approval of John Bransford as a candidate for mayor, and he surely has never repented. He thinks of the stockade just what he did a year ago. His views are just what they were when he went to California at the time of the reception to Admiral Evans and the war fleet, and boldly announced in an interview that he approved the stockade plan. And if his hands were free tomorrow he would put the stockade right back in business—from which it was driven alone by the Republicans, and the paper of their party.

A man has a right to any opinion his judgment approves. The only point on which the public may properly insist is that they know where to find him who seeks to take control of public affairs. Society has a right to know if the men who fought the stockade last year are in favor of it this year—and for the future. And if they are not, why are they indorsing for mayor the very man who as mayor established the stockade, defended it, guarded it with his policemen, and guaranteed the cash returns by the exercise of his power?

Mr. Bransford is a plain-spoken and a careful man. He doesn't declare himself till he has thought of the matter, and decided that a certain course is right. And then he doesn't change with the changing seasons. He stays put. How about the men who fought him and his plan a year ago, and are declaring him their choice for mayor today? Shall we look for them to reverse themselves with every new moon? Why don't they stay put?

GO WHERE YOU BELONG.

Mayor John Bransford is one of those simple natures whom every one can understand. He is a prudent and thoughtful individual who looks ahead. He looks before he leaps. And when he leaps, he tries to land where he is going to stay. So that when he went into the American party, he did it deliberately. And he didn't back out again. He gave the principles of that party his absolute indorsement. He may not like every man in it, nor everything that is done in the name of that party. But he stands for that party. A number of gentlemen here in Salt Lake who have been very strong in their opposition to the American party helped fight John Bransford through the campaign in which he was elected. They have fought the party of which he is the chief official year after year—since its organization. They know that of all men John Bransford, being the mayor, is the foremost exponent of American party principles, the expression of the purpose of that organization. So that, when they indorse John Bransford for mayor, they are surely indorsing the American party. And we note with more amusement than surprise that some of the men who have been loudest in their antagonism to the American party, are now its chief indorsers. They have "resolved" against it. Now they are for it. They have voted against it. Now they pledge themselves to vote for its officers and its candidates. They have lived and labored to defeat its aims. Now they align themselves with the recognized members of the American party, and promise it that unqualified support which is expressed in the support of its selection for the office of mayor. Why don't the men who are for the American party get into the American party? What good reason is there for pretending to be against the American party while supporting the American party's candidate for mayor? Gentlemen who indorse John Bransford—he having been mayor of this city for the past two years and more—should get into the American party, where they belong. Gentlemen who belong to the Republican party will not support John Bransford.

Gentlemen who indorse John Bransford—he having been mayor of this city for the past two years and more—should get into the American party, where they belong. Gentlemen who belong to the Republican party will not support John Bransford.

THE JEWEL OF CONSISTENCY.

If there be one rule more important than others in the American party creed it is that the line of public employment must be drawn against certain citizens because of their religious creed.

Plain-spoken advocates of the American party have declared that it is "the union of the churches against the church." They hold that no member of the taboored faith shall hold any office in the city.

John Bransford as mayor has given life and effect to that rule. Because of it, he drove John Burbridge out of the police department.

No fair man ever claimed that Burbridge was not a good policeman; that he ever even for an instant failed of his duty as an officer. He was loyal to his superiors, and faithful in the discharge of his duty. He was a good public servant.

But he belonged to the church upon whose destruction the American party had directed its activities. And Bransford dismissed him.

It is hardly consistent for men prominent in the church to which Burbridge belongs to declare themselves for the mayor who enforced that rule. One expects Christian gentleness from all who "name the name." But it is curious to see devotees of any faith kissing the hand that smites them. It would be strange to see any citizen proclaim approval of a mayor whose first and strongest claim to eminence is that he enforced the American party rule of church discrimination, and religious intolerance.

To one not a member of the proscribed faith that indorsement of the un-American, know-nothing, rule would be simply bad citizenship. In the believer in that creed it is grossly inconsistent.

AN EMPIRE TO THE EAST.

Farmers from the middle states are finding fortune in the region between the Duchesne and the Strawberry, in the old Uinta country. Many farms have been established, and the newcomers are sending glowing reports to their former neighbors "back east." They expect very great benefits from the completion of the Moffat road.

That whole section of the state suffered severely from the recent storms. A mail driver, a colored man, was drowned at the crossing of the Duchesne, where the government bridge will presently be located. And the Uinta Standard at Roosevelt says:

We will all welcome the day when Uncle Sam gets his bridge built, and when crossing will think of the good work of Senator Snoot in getting the appropriation.

The people of the west side of the state will have to work very intently or those farmers in the new section will outstrip the older settlers within the next ten years. They have the making of an empire east of the range.

NOW WILL YOU BUY?

Salt Lake has made a bigger percentage of gain in new buildings in the past year than any other state of the Union. It has gained $68 per cent over the record of last year. And last year was a hard one for any other city to equal.

That is rather a big statement for Salt Lake. The Chicago Construction News has given the facts and figures to the world, and the world is going to pay some attention to them. When a man east of the mountains reads that Salt Lake has made a percentage gain of nearly a thousand in its building, he knows it is a good city for him to find. He knows real estate in that city is worth having. It is not going to be less in value or lower in price. He reads of the past years of Salt Lake's building history, and is amazed at what a thousand per cent of gain must mean. It is substantial, because it rests on absolute and proved values. It is not a boom, because things have been going for years in that direction. Salt Lake is safe, because it is not ahead of the country. The development of the state makes investments here secure. And

STICK TO THE PARTY.

Box Elder Journal: The dominant party of the nation is doing a great deal of work which is bringing about some great results, and business throughout the country is being revived. The present incumbent of the senate and of the house are doing great things for the state, and with such men ahead of the Republican party there is no reason why Brigham should not be in the same boat. "Hats off to the Republican party this fall."

Free Peaches, Brigham City, Sept. 15

that sort of argument is attractive to the man with money.

In every direction there are good bargains. On every block there is the inducement to buy and build. For, after all, that is what has made the record. Countless numbers of new homes and scores of apartment houses have been erected. They all are filled, and the demand is still unquenched.

This is pretty good argument in favor of prices advancing. Now will you buy?

TO THE CREDIT OF UTAH.

One incident in the travel of every train through Utah is the offering of fruit for sale at stations within any good fruit belt. Passengers on through trains are glad to get fresh fruit, and often boys drive a good business in the few moments of a train's stopping.

It frequently happens that the boys care more for the silver they get than for the character of the fruit they sell. Brigham City has encountered this difficulty, and is trying to follow the example set by the citizens of Fallside, where the fruit selling at the railroad station was supervised by city officials.

Green River has had a better experience, as the following, from the Dispatch of that city, will show:

Several wagonloads of cantaloupes are sold at the trains every day. They sell readily to the passengers for five cents apiece, and it is a mighty good advertisement for the valley. Some of the boys sell as high as $9 worth in one day. Home grown peaches and other fruits are also sold in large quantities, as well as hot coffee and sandwiches. Most of the young merchants make more money than their dads, and the best part of it is that without exception they are handling only the best grade of fruits and melons.

That means that every melon or bit of fruit sold is a commendation of Utah.

APPLES FROM HELPER.

One of the recent interesting things in Utah history is the shipping of a lot of apples from Helper, in this city, to the Chamber of Commerce here in Salt Lake. The apples speak for themselves. They are, probably, the finest specimens that have been grown in Utah. Which is saying a good deal for the fruit of the state.

Helper has not usually been considered an inviting place for the apple industry. Apples require more care than some other fruits. It takes years of time and worlds of effort to bring them to perfection. The men who have made apple growing successful in the region of Helper have done a distinct and a very great service to the state of Utah. They have established some facts that will not be underrated by their fellow citizens.

What has been done in the Helper neighborhood can probably be done in every part of Utah. The land there is not apparently inviting. But as "gold is where you find it," so fruit land is where you can successfully grow fruit. And there is now little question but every acre of Utah not standing up on edge, can be brought to a very high grade of profitable productiveness.

Helper has offered a challenge. Is any man in Utah afraid of other sections when they can grow premium apples there?

At the time of the railroad wreck in Tintic, the other day, the Tooele Transcript was unable to get any information from the railroad company; but had a pretty accurate report of the accident, after all. The policy of withholding information from the newspapers at a time of wreck has for the most part been changed. And if the San Pedro officials were unresponsive on this occasion, it was an exception to their rule. One can call it the San Pedro Route when there are wrecks to report.

St. George citizens had conveyances for fifty people at Modena last Wednesday, ready to take them across the sixty-five miles to the capital of Dixie. They had been led to expect the governor's party, and that from the Commercial club. But circumstances made impossible the visit of a number who had planned for the trip. It is to be regretted that St. George fair was not visited by as many as were expected. But those who missed the visit are the biggest losers.

One statement made at the Scandinavian celebration in Richfield last week was to the effect that Brigham Young once declared the Sevier valley would some day support a population of 150,000 people. And, with the employment of all the resources within their power, the people there can make that prophecy come absolutely true within the next five years.

Sanpete county people declined to make consolidation of their schools. The local conditions there are a good deal against the move. But what has been called "the geographical objection" can probably be obviated by making two districts in the county. The new method has advantages sufficient to commend it to the judgment of Sanpete's progressive people.

Brigham City expects from 12,000 to 15,000 people to attend the Peach day celebration, on Wednesday of this week. And they are making arrangements to take care of them.

AN OLD-FASHIONED ACTRESS.

Charlotte Crabtree, otherwise "Lotta" (ask your father if he ever saw her on the stage), has just won litigation which will bring her property valued at $100,000. She is worth, it is said, about $1,000,000. That is by investing her stage earnings in real estate in large cities. She was never contented a beauty; she did not encourage the "Johnnies"; did not figure in the divorce court in any capacity, and she quit playing before the public got tired of her. No benefit performances had to be given for her after her retirement. She was altogether respectable, and she paid her own bills. Quite an old-style actress.
