

LEADERS OF SOCIETY TAKE UP GARDENING

(Special Cable to Herald-Republic.)
 WASHINGTON, D. C., March 26.—In the hopes that the ground hog's spite has been turned, Washington women are turning their attention to gardens. Perhaps it is not generally known that society women care for gardens, but they are as common as hall rooms in Washington and afford a charming background for spring festivities.

Although Mrs. Roosevelt took advantage of the White house terrace for entertainments, Mrs. Taft will be the first mistress of the White house to have dinner parties in the terrace gardens and to place string bands in the forest of Dutch orange trees, which make a bower of the second terrace.

Mr. and Mrs. Larz Anderson have a roof garden which makes one believe that the days when the Florentines fought in the streets have returned. It is an exact reproduction of the loggia in an ancient palace of Lung Arno, where all sorts of protection was necessary against the flying missiles from the street. It is so spacious that a company of 100 can wander among the fire pots and ornamental vases and statues and feel quite at home. There are broad paths of marble with seats which are duplicates of classic designs about Florence and Venice, and the paths are bounded by shrubbery which remains green throughout the winter. Rhododendrons, ivy and jasmines trail over soft, tiled walls, drapery and dainty fountains.

The venerable mansion famous as the residence of the late President, now the home of William Corcoran Rustie, has the most beautiful garden in Washington. Mrs. Rustie, who is the daughter of Levi P. Morton, former vice president, is a lover of flowers and has planned some of the most notable garden fetes the capitol has seen in many years.

Mrs. MacVeagh, wife of the secretary of the treasury, has made the roof garden of her home famous in her short residence in Washington. It has a loggia effect, inclosed by glass and is perfectly heated. There is a fountain, goldfish and countless aquatic plants, besides rare old furniture of the sixteenth century, with rugs and Oriental weavings for the floors and drapings.

"The wearing of a flower in the buttonhole is a habit, not a fad," declared Chalmers Wilson, the eminent New York lawyer, the other day. It would appear to be the case with Speaker Cannon, at any rate. A vivid red carnation has become as much a part of the distinguished speaker's toilet as his necktie or his collar button. Even during the recent struggle to retain his seat, Speaker Cannon appeared each morning rosy and smiling with a fresh bloom in his buttonhole. Whatever of nervousness he may have felt within was belied by his outward appearance. On St. Patrick's day most of the congressmen wore shamrocks in recognition of the Irish holiday, but like Kipling's red bull in a green field, the same bright red carnation blazed from Mr. Cannon's lapel.

Representative Mitchell E. Driscoll of

New York, whose Irish extraction is made apparent when he is excited, by a decided brogue, was conspicuous on St. Patrick's day for not wearing a shamrock. When asked by a colleague why he didn't have one of the Irish flowers in his buttonhole, he replied indignantly:

"Why the devil should I wear a shamrock? Look at me face."

"Uncle Joe" is not the only politician who is partial to boutonnières. Representative Longworth is seldom seen without a carnation in his buttonhole, and Seneca E. Payne and Champ Clark are two of the better known congressmen who would as soon go without their cigars as without a floral lapel adornment.

Countess Moltke, the Boston-born wife of the Danish minister, has learned by experience that it isn't the easiest thing in the world to be the American chaperone of a foreign legation in Washington. For her plans are often thrown into confusion by the death of some forty-sixth cousin of the sovereign of the nation her legation represents. The countess has been busy for days recalling acceptances of invitations to entertainments to be given in honor of the Danish legation in Washington. Before her marriage she was Miss Corbett, a social leader in Boston. Even now the countess is girlishly fond of social gaiety, but one thing after another has happened to keep her more or less in seclusion. Last winter the fragile health of her young son made her decline many invitations and restrict her in issuing several on her own account. When this winter approached she intended to make the Danish legation the center of great social activity, but a sister-in-law of the king of Denmark died and upset all her plans. When the number of the Danish royal connections is estimated, it seems almost useless for Countess Moltke to plan anything in the way of social entertainment.

The Chinese legation is attracting a great deal of attention in Washington this winter, owing to the presence of a bride and four oriental maids in their portals. This is the first time Washington society has been privileged to witness a real Chinese wedding, and it is of great interest to the sentimentally inclined. In all its details the romance of young Mr. and Mrs. Henry Chang, son and daughter-in-law of the Chinese minister, has been characterized by Orientalism. Mrs. Chang, who is only eighteen years old, was before her marriage Miss Isabel Tang, daughter of one of the foremost Chinese statesmen. She cannot remember a time when she did not know the young man who is now her husband, married only three months ago. In contrast to the American honeymoon, when the bride and groom give themselves up to the pleasures of travel and are extensively feted by their friends, the young Chinese couple, with that obedience to their parents so strictly required in the Orient, have returned to their studies. Every morning young Mrs. Chang meekly takes her place with the four younger girls of the household, two of whom are her sisters and two the sisters of her husband, and spends several hours in copying the lessons assigned by the tutors, who call daily at the mansion of the minister. Not to be outdone by her bride, young Henry Chang, who was graduated only last June from Princeton, is taking special lectures at the Smithsonian institution and delving among the records of the agricultural department, in which he learns of improved methods of farming and dairying.

The two daughters of the minister are known by the American names of Alice and Lily, one fourteen and one fifteen years of age. The Misses Tang, the younger sisters of Mrs. Henry Chang, are the daughters of the special envoy who was sent to this country to thank the United States government on behalf of the Chinese empire for its remission of the Boxer indemnity. The envoys was so impressed by the excellent educational advantages to be had in this country that he made up his mind to educate his daughters here. Despite their leaning toward American customs, the ladies of the Chang household have not adopted American dress. Mme. Chang, whose family is among the most progressive of the older Chinese nobility, has never been subjected to the cruelty of foot-binding. The tiny feet of the Chang ladies sport the most modest of Chinese slippers. Their gloves are American made and the contrast between their gorgeous flowered silk frocks and the gloves of sober brown is rather startling. American hair ribbons, too, adorn their conventional Chinese coiffures. Each of the five girls, bride and all, brushes her hair down smooth and flat, with big bows of ribbon at the crown and round, tight plaits hanging down the back. The style usually adopted by the Chinese women has been modified to suit their individual tastes. Their "fringes" have been cut in a wedge shape, the shortest locks in front and

HOW THIN FOLKS CAN GET FLESHY

New Accidental Discovery Gives Nutritionists a Powerful Means for Thin People and Rounds out Imperfect Figures.

Simple Prescription Given.

For women—and men, too, for that matter—who can never appear stylish with anything they wear, because of abnormal thinness and angularity, this remarkable prescription is destined to solve the problem. As a beauty maker for the figure it is simply wonderful while it adds brightening to the eyes and color to the cheeks and lips. It requires no particular dieting, but acts as an aid to nature by its peculiar action on the nervous and digestive systems. The blood and nerves distribute over the body all the nourishment or flesh building elements obtained from the food. The trouble with thin people has always been that they do not absorb or retain enough of the flesh making material, hence their weight even to a normal extent; but this new discovery of blending certain harmless drugs is a revelation, as scientific hundreds have gained from ten to forty pounds in a few weeks. There is no danger of becoming fat, for when you get the right weight then stop using.

The general health and strength is greatly improved and an average from the age of sixteen to sixty. Women soon get plump, with well rounded arms and full bust; a man become straight, strong-looking and healthy.

In a half pint bottle get three ounces of essence of pepsin and three ounces of syrup of rhubarb. Then add one ounce compound essence cod-liver oil, shake and let stand two hours. Then add one ounce (measure) of cod-liver oil (in capsules). Take a teaspoonful before and after meals, and weigh before beginning.

Every Woman's Hair Should Be Beautiful

(From Style and Fashion, New York.)

"Beautiful, glossy and lustrous hair is within the reach of every woman who will only try," said Mme. LeClair, the French beauty specialist, today.

"By trying I mean she must use intelligent as well as willing to put forth the physical effort required. If your hair is dull, brittle, dry and streaked, it means that you are not taking intelligent care of it."

"Stop your scrubbing, rubbing and rinsing. Soap and water shampoo only give you a headache, keep you indoors the better part of a day, and expose you to catching cold."

"Every woman who wants abundant, lustrous hair should use a dry shampoo. Mix four ounces of powdered orris powder with one ounce of talcum powder. Sprinkle about a tablespoonful of this mixture upon the head; then brush the powder thoroughly through the hair. This cleanses the scalp and hair and gives the hair a beautiful glossy lustre. In addition to making it light and fluffy, Therox encourages the growth of hair."
