

ANY CANDIDATES FOR HIGHER HONOR
 Members of the Lower House Who May Run for Governor This Fall.
REPEAL OF THE OLEO LAW
PROTECTION NEEDED AGAINST CHEAP WARES FROM ORIENT.

Washington, May 14.—There are more than the usual number of gubernatorial aspirants in the House this session. They are about equally divided between the Democrats and Republicans. Indications are that the gubernatorial lightning may strike some of them. In the New York delegation, Representatives Sulzer and Bennett are each being groomed by their respective following. Representative Sulzer is the dean of the New York Democrats. He is considered by the Democrats in the House as an available candidate to carry the Empire state into the Democratic column this fall. If the New York Democracy can be influenced by the House Democrats, Mr. Sulzer will be nominated for governor by acclamation.

Representative Bennett stands well with the Republican organization of New York, and is one of the House regulars. He is well thought of by Speaker Cannon, and is frequently called by him to preside over the House. Mr. Bennett has not announced his candidacy, but is "in the hands of his friends."

Others who are after the gubernatorial nomination in their respective states include Representative Eugene N. Foss of Massachusetts, who recently carried a Republican district by a large democratic majority; Representative Ben Johnson of Kentucky (Democrat); Allen of Maine (Republican); Hughes of New Jersey (Democrat); Longworth of Ohio (Republican); Kethornel of Pennsylvania (Democrat); and Hayes of California (Republican insurgent).

Concerning it can be said that while he is not making a strenuous fight for the nomination it is known that if the nomination for governor comes his way, he will not refuse it to remain in the House.

Oleo Legislation.
 "Some twenty-five years ago," said a veteran employe of the House, "the newspapers were filled with stories of the legislative fight in progress on the Hatch bill, better known as the margarine bill." It was the farmers who started the cry against oleo, and they were strong enough to get what they wanted. It was a Democratic House that passed the Hatch bill, but it was Republican votes that put the bill through. Now, with the prevailing high prices of food, comes an organized effort to repeal the tax on oleo. The fight for the repealing is led by organized and unorganized labor, and as the average congressman does not care to antagonize the prevailing bill through, there will be pretty safe to assume that there will be legislation on this subject before the adjournment of Congress. The oleo law was class legislation, pure and simple, and it illustrates what can be done by a band of organizers engaged in working up a sentiment for special laws."

Was a Personal Fight.
 The House Insurgents have now made it clear to the country that they were never more serious than now about wishing the rules amended for the purpose of permitting the majority to do business. Their fight on Speaker Cannon has from the beginning been personal. This is shown by the fact that with a rules committee elected by the House more than six weeks ago, the first resolution has yet to be reported to the House, favoring the adoption of a resolution of any character. The insurgents have demonstrated that a majority of the House controls, but in doing this they have broken the backbone of the House organization as controlled by the majority of the Republicans. The regulars are saying that if the insurgents made their fight inside the party lines and not joined forces with the Democrats the President's legislative program, so far as the House is concerned, would have been put through, and whatever the cause of delay the responsibility would be with the Senate.

Little Legislation Needed.
 Representative Finley of South Carolina, who has served in the House committee on post offices and post roads for so many years, says there is but little need for legislation in the matter of new laws for the postoffice department. Under the general law he says, the postmaster general, by executive order can correct any of the abuses that are now being committed. As an example Mr. Finley called attention to what the postmaster general has done in order to reduce the deficit. That official, he said, had increased the cost of registry fee from 10 cents to 15 cents, but this had caused no great hardship. It had, however, had an appreciable effect on the revenues of the department. There are many other little things that can be done by executive order, Mr. Finley said, that would improve the service without necessitating an appeal to Congress.

Rostand Honored for Writing "Chantecler"
 (Special Cable to Herald-Republican.)
 Paris, May 14.—M. Edmund Rostand has received an unexpected reward for "Chantecler." The French Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has conferred on him its grand diploma of merit in recognition of his having written a play about cocks and hens and other birds and beasts, recalling in the letter announcing the award that it had paid a similar honor to another poet before him, M. Rostand, accepting the distinction, with gratitude, feels flattered and touched at the mark of friendship which "seems to be extended to him by all those humble and good dumb brothers which the society, to its infinite credit, protects. I have always loved animals passionately, and I am prouder of having never once given one pain than of having once made some of them talk."
