HEARTS OF THE WORLD

Lyric Today

To call D. W. Griffith's supreme triumph "Hearts of the World" a picture play is more than an injustice—it is almost a sacrilege—"Hearts of the World" is a "thousand times more than a photo spectacle—it is the story of the greatest war the world has ever known told in a way more gripping and impressive than the printed or spoken word could ever make it. "Hearts of the World" is the war itself. The title tells the whole story—it is the appealing voice of humanity crying out for justice and liberty.

Around the heartbeats of the children of the earth Griffith has built his masterpiece. It is love, life and happiness, then war, separation, horror and death. And yet withal it is not unattractive to the spectator. There is a fascination to its realism and an appeal that is truly tremendous.

Back in the little French village of Noyon in France close to where the American soldiers were fighting Mr. Griffith laid the scene of his story. There amid shot and steel from huge Boche cannon the big company of motion picture stars were baptized in modern warfare. There they enacted the great heart story of the war. Two American patriots lived in France, as the tale unfolds, one had a daughter, the other a son. They met and loved and were happy as young lovers always are. Then came Germany's decision to crush the world with France as her first victim. The boy, though an American citizen, enlisted in the army of France believing that "the country good enough to live in is good enough to fight for." The development of the story shows the struggle of the little French band to hold their village from the Huns against tremendous odds—their failure and the terrible experiences of the natives including the boy's sweetheart, until finally rescued by the allied troops, with the brave Americans among them. Yet through this sad experience there is a vein of charming comedy that brings out all its beauties like a jewel in a rich setting.

COMMANDS HIS SON TO WED GIRL WHO BREAKS HIS POWER

If you were the richest and most powerful man in the world and you had been brought to a point of humiliation by a clever and beautiful girl, whom you had forbidden the doors of your home, and who loved and was loved by your only son, what would you do about it?

What John Burckett Ryder did about it provides one of the most intensely dramatic and intensely human scenes in "The Lion and the Mouse," the Vitagraph super feature which will be seen at the Oak theatre tonight.

Confronted in his library by the girl and his son, as the girl, smiling her triumph, starts to leave the house, the great man turns in his wrath on the youth, and says this: "You damned fool—go after her. If a girl likes that loved me—"

Alice Joyce is Shirley Rossmore, the girl, in this screen adaptation of the famous stage success of the same name written by the late Charles Klein and produced under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith president of Vitagraph, and her characterization is conceded one of her greatest screen triumphs. She plays the part of the daughter of a Federal Judge, who issues an injunction which rouses the wrath of Ryder, who in revenge forces him to trial for impeachment. In his safe are letters which will establish Rossmore's innocence, and the plot centers about Shirley's finally successful efforts to get into the safe and get hold of the letters.
