TOM REED ON HIS ANCESTORS.

Why the Maine Man Drew the Genealogical Line Where He Did.

In the memorable campaign of 1890 Thomas B. Reed went west to address a mass meeting. On the way an elderly gentleman named Reed boarded the special car in which the genial "Tom" was smoking and entertaining his friends, and on being presented, said:

"Mr. Reed, I had thought to write you; but learning you were coming into Iowa I waited your coming, feeling sure I could learn more in a brief interview than I could from an extended correspondence with you. I have thus far failed to find in any of the numerous sketches of your life any mention of your ancestry back of your father, Thomas Brackett Reed, Sr. Will you kindly give me the name of your grandfather on your father's side?"

Mr. Reed promptly responded. "And your great-grandfather?" was the next inquiry.

Here the speaker gave his new-found relative a broad smile, and twisting his mouth to one side, as was his wont, he said:

"I'll have to admit I don't know. The fact is, Mr. Reed, I retired from the field of genealogical research quite early in life. After satisfying myself that no one of my immediate ancestors had been hung for murder or been run out of the country for horse stealing, I thought it safest not to pursue the subject further!"—Judge
