crisis now confronts this country." The reactionaries are trying to seize the Government, and to defeat their diabolical designs the people must command Mr. Roosevelt to accept the nomination for "a second elective term." Not a third term, it is to be observed. The Senator thinks that the President could no more disobey such a command than he could refuse to serve if he were drafted in war.

On the Democratic side a timid attempt to develop a conservative candidate by appealing to Southern pride has been withered in the bud. The suggestion that the time has come to nominate a Southern man has met with the general response that while the fact that a man lives in the South is no longer a bar to his ambition, the Democratic nomination for 1908 is already mortgaged to William Jennings Bryan. A canvass of the Democratic National Committee by the New York "Times" discloses no dissent from this view. Mr. Clark Howell of Georgia, when asked whether the Democrats of his State would favor the nomination of a candidate from the South, responded: "Not against Bryan next time. They believe him to be the logical candidate." Mr. Josephus Daniels, the committeeman from North Carolina, said that the Democrat he represented would not consider a sectional matter in naming a candidate for the Presidency. They wanted Bryan, who was stronger with them than ever. Nobody mentioned Mr. Hearst.—Collier's Weekly.

WILLIAM FOTHERINGHAM.

That was a terribly sad affair by which William Fotheringham lost his life in an explosion in a mine in which he was interested in Montana. He was taken without a moment's warning and his wife left a widow and seven children fatherless. The shock was so terrible to Mrs. Fotheringham that her reason is dethroned.

Mr. Fotheringham began life in Beaver, moved to Circleville and later to Lehi, which for some years has been the home of the family. He was a most exemplary man, a kind and considerate husband and father, and greatly respected by all who knew him. To his family the blow is terrible. May the God of all grace comfort and sustain them in their sorrow.

DEATH OF HON. JOHN H. FULLMER.

In the death of John H. Fullmer which took place at the L. D. S. Hospital on Wednesday the state suffers a distinct loss, for Mr. Fullmer was one of its very best citizens. He was just in the prime of life about 49 years old and in the heyday of his usefulness. He was born in Salt Lake county, but in childhood moved south with his parents who settled in Beaver, later he moved to Circleville and engaged in the general mercantile business, farming and mining. He prospered and for years was one of the leading men in the southern country. For a while he was deputy United States Marshal under United States Marshal Nat Brigham; he was county commissioner for Piute county, and also represented that county in the lower house of the third state legislature. He held other positions of honor and was always faithful to his trust. He leaves a widow and seven children to mourn, who will miss his kindly counsel and advice and his good teaching and Christian example. He also leaves his aged mother, Mrs. Tanner, affectionately known among her friends as "Aunt Rachel." The bereaved ones have the sincerest sympathy of all their friends and acquaintances. The interment took place at his home place, Circleville.

The friends of Hon. Fred J. Kiesel and he has many of them not only in Ogden, his home town, but in Salt Lake and all over the state, are pleased to learn that he is rapidly recovering from his recent illness. He had quite a serious time for several weeks.

The National guard is getting on a better basis than it has been on for years. Governor Cutler made a good move when he appointed Colonel Plummer. The fine effects of his work are already very apparent.

The Tribune and the Telegram don't like President Roosevelt for another term. None of the grafters love Roosevelt. His very name causes those sheets to "throw fits."

The Methodists and Congregationalists each endeavored to settle the street car strike and failed. The Mormons then stepped in and succeeded.
