The operation, performed at the Deaconess hospital in this city, consists of raising the eye ball and making an incision to permit the fluids to escape. The disease usually results in total blindness. The first state is a so-called smoky vision caused by hardening of eye balls and then periods of blindness, following visions of iridescent light. A sudden shock, and frequently without cause, is followed by blindness. Mrs. Uhls was under hospital treatment less than a week and is now at her home. The operation was the first of its kind performed in this part of the northwest and was successful in every way, in that the woman's sight has been restored and she sees better than at any time during the last 20 years. While giving every credit to the oculist, Mrs. Uhls says her prayer for sight was answered from heaven.
