DEMONSTRATORS GETTING BUSY

Dr. R. J. Evans, head of the Agricultural college farm demonstrators, has finished a week's trip through Iron and Washington counties. He went down to Dixie for a preliminary investigation of agricultural conditions there, and incidentally made a visit to the branch Agricultural college at Cedar City. He says the country is practically undeveloped.

"The people of Washington county don't know what they've got," said the doctor. "It is the land of opportunity."

There are only about 17,800 acres of improved land out of a total acreage of 2,952,000 in Iron county. Small cattle farms in the mountains produce the livelihood of most of the people. About nine-tenths of their crops in the eastern part of Iron county is alfalfa.

There is some reclamation of land being undertaken by artesian wells, some of which give 350 gallons per minute. This land is some of the best in the state. The people of New Harmony are successfully carrying on dry farming.

Mr. Evans explained that the aim of himself and his co-workers is to economize irrigation waters that twice the area that is now being farmed by irrigation may be given water service. Next they want to promote the dairying business, a small amount of which is now being carried on. Then they want to see the farmers, who are now importing flour by the carload, produce their own flour by dry farming. Thus they would put Iron county on a self-supporting basis in every phase of agricultural business, with a surplus to be put into such concentrated products as lucerne seed, beef, etc.

Dr. Evans says the people of those parts are enthusiastic over the advent of the newly empowered farm demonstrators and their work. This resident worker there, Mr. David Sharp, has already received scores of invitations to visit farmers.
