GASOLINE'S EARLY USE

The first attempt to apply gasoline as a motive power was made by a Frenchman, Pierre Joseph Ravel, who patented forty-five years ago today a steam generator heated by mineral oils, to be applied to steam locomotion on ordinary roads. Ravel's engine was fitted to a small carriage, and developed 3 horse-power. The Franco-German war put an end to Ravel's experiments for a time, but years later he built a motor car in which petroleum was used for the direct generation of motive power. In 1876 Lutz invented a burner by which a mixture of gasoline and other naphthas, called mazzout, was used as fuel on steamships. About the same time gasoline was used as an illuminant in street lamps, and later a new use was found for it in the manufacture of varnish and oleoth. Gasoline, amounting to 5 per cent of the distilled product of the crude petroleum, continued to be a drug on the market until the invention of the gasoline motor and its application to the automobile, boats, aeroplanes and hundreds of industrial uses. Several inventors helped to inaugurate the "age of gasoline," but the chief of them was George B. Selden of Rochester, N. Y., the father of the automobile.—Milwaukee Sentinel.
