DECISION IS MOST IMPORTANT TO RAILROAD MEN

It was simply a detail of the railroad system which, in its entirety, was an interstate instrumentality.

By this decision the supreme court includes within the masters' liability act of congress any employe whose engagements further such commerce, though he be not connected with mere train operation, which would apply to a vast number of persons residing in a railroad center such as Ogden.

COLORED MEN WERE EAGER TO SEARCH

William Lawrence, one of the members of the colored camping party, strongly protests against the statement said to have been made by Eber Piers that the colored people had come to assist him in his search for Raymond O'Donnell Sunday night. Lawrence stated today that he and fellow campers were eager to take up the search and also notify the sheriff's office but that Piers maintained that his friend would appear in due time and that the sheriff's force could do no good.

"We talked to Piers and the other men in the morning as they passed our camp," said Lawrence, "and when we began hunting we met them farther up the canyon. It was about 6:30 o'clock when Piers came stumbling back to our camp exhausted. He was so weak he nearly fell in the campfire. When we asked him where his friend was he said he was still up the canyon and that he was wading in the stream when he saw him last. Lawrence Fair and myself suggested that we search for him, because we knew the man could not stand to walk in the cold water very long. But Piers said he thought his friend would come down."

"I made him some coffee and Mr. Young, a white man, camped across the way, gave him his supper. When we insisted on going back or notifying the sheriff to come with waders for the creek, Piers still said his friend would appear. Mr. Young, two boys and myself walked up the canyon but it was like looking for a needle in a haystack because we had no idea where the man was last seen. I got wet to the skin walking in the snow and wet brush. When we returned I stayed up and made a big fire until 10:30 o'clock. Piers went to bed."

"In the morning it was the same way. It was 9:30 o'clock Monday before he showed up and after we had started down to meet him. Finally I went down after Mr. Doyle. When the men came, I drove the wagon because I was wet through and wanted to dry out. When the man was found, I helped to put him in the wagon."

"Instead of refusing to assist in the search, we in the camp were the ones who were most eager to do something to find the man."
