

SINN FEINERS USED AS PAWN

Were Dupes in Game Played by Berlin and Certain Germans and Irish Revolutionists in America.

Boy-Ed and Von Papen With Numerous Others Help in Furthering Plans—Casement's Treason.

London, May 2.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press).—The Sinn Fein organization was used as a pawn in the game played by Berlin and certain Germans and revolutionists in America, according to the history of the Irish uprising as told by the authorities here. The failure of the revolt, it is pointed out, was made doubly sure by the inability, or disinclination on the part of Germany to carry out important features at almost the last moment. The facts given here have been gathered from authentic British sources and are presented as completely as possible under the censorship.

war, certain Irishmen and German authorities conceived the idea of utilizing the Sinn Fein organization for a revolt—the Germans being actuated by the admittedly legitimate purpose of weakening Great Britain and the others having national aspirations or, in at least one case, a desire to obtain revenge for alleged political wrongs. The Sinn Feiners accepted the plan and eventually fell victims to a scheme which was not of their own making.

Casement's Trip to Christiania.
Sir Roger Casement, now in London tower awaiting trial on charge of treason went from America to Christiania late in 1914 under an assumed name. At Christiania he conferred with the German consul and then proceeded to Germany. Coincidentally with his arrival in Berlin certain officials placed their influence and guarantees of assistance back of an Irish rebellion. Elaborate plans for furthering a revolution were put away. According to this account Germany agreed to furnish money, arms and men to assist the Sinn Feiners and, most important of all, is said to have agreed to an invasion of England which would prevent soldiers being sent into Ireland by the British war department.

Irishmen Carry Funds From U. S.
America was made the medium of communication between Berlin and Ireland. Certain Irishmen in the United States enlisted their services and Captains Boyed and von Papen, the then German naval and military attaches respectively at Washington, together with numerous others, some of whom are now under arrest in America, are said to have done their part in furthering the plans. The carrying of funds and information to the Sinn Feiners was done largely by the Irish sympathizers in America who were able to visit their home land without question.

Shortly after Casement's arrival in Germany the statement appeared in German papers that his Norwegian servant had been making trips to Christiania to visit the British authorities for the purpose of delivering Casement over to them. Sir Roger published his charges that the British minister at Christiania had tried to have him assassinated. This was the first news the British public had received of Casement's presence in Germany. His accusations against the British minister are now said to have been the initial step in a publicity campaign to gain sympathy.

Tried to Alienate Irish Soldiers.
The next intelligence received in London concerning Sir Roger was brought by returning soldiers who reported that he was going about the prison camps and trying to recruit Irish soldiers to fight against England. He is said to have obtained few acceptances but some men agreed to his proposition, being given freedom and furnished with the green uniform of the Sinn Feiners. This somewhat haphazard plotting went on until November, 1915. Then there was a lull in proceedings. The truth appears to be that the revolutionary wind which had blown so hot from Berlin at first was then getting cool. The Germans had grown tired of Casement. Casement himself retired to Munich, where it was reported he was in poor health.

Those persons in the United States who were taking a part in the engineering of the revolution became weary of waiting and sent a man to see Casement. This man, an Irishman and a British subject, living in America, proceeded direct to Germany without touching England. He brought word that a definite date for the uprising must be set and plans laid to meet that date. This was agreed to and either Eastern Sunday or Easter Monday was fixed upon.

Sinn Feiners Kept in Dark.
As the time drew near it was seen that a revolution could not be made a success and the idea of an invasion was virtually discarded. This fact was not known to the Sinn Feiners until almost the moment before the fighting started. However, certain Berlin officials had given their word to assist the movement and decided to satisfy the obligation as far as possible without heavy loss of life or war material.

Easter approached and it was proposed to dispatch a ship to Ireland with arms and those Irish soldiers who had agreed to fight. A naval attack on the east coast of England and air raids also were settled upon to divert the attention of the British authorities from Ireland.

Ship Starts For Tralee.
The ship with some 20,000 arms did start from Kiel for Tralee, on the western coast of Ireland, but it was manned by a German crew and did not carry the Irish recruits. When Sir Roger found that the plan for an invasion of England had fallen through, he refused to let his followers embark, declaring that it would be sheer murder. He did agree to go himself, however, and departed on the submarine.

The fate of the ship of arms and of Casement has been told. Sir Roger and associates fell into the hands of the British at Tralee and the ship was sunk. The naval attack and air raids on the British coast was carried out but the Sinn Feiners found themselves espousing a hopeless cause.

Viscount Tries to Avert Trouble.
London, May 22, 2:15 p. m.—At the continuation today of the Royal commission's inquiry into the Irish revolt, Viscount Middleton described the action which he said he had taken to bring the activities of the Sinn Feiners to the attention of the Irish authorities before the outbreak.

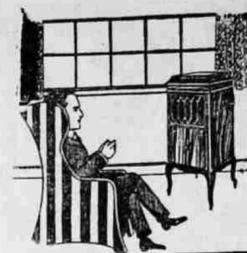

He said he had conferred with Augustine Birrell, then chief secretary for Ireland, and had strongly urged that the National Volunteers be disarmed.

On February 25 Mr. Birrell had written him a letter in which the following occurred:

"To proclaim the Irish volunteers an illegal body and put them down by force would, in my opinion, be a reckless, foolish act and promote disloyalty to a prodigious extent."
Preceding Viscount Middleton, Mr. Birrell was interrogated regarding conferences at which, according to his previous testimony, he had asked for more troops to be sent to Ireland. A letter written by Major General MacReady of the adjutant general's staff, was ready. It said the conferences had reference to recruiting and that the proposal was that troops be sent to various parts of Ireland to encourage men to join the colors.

Mr. Birrell said he was surprised to hear he had omitted to mention at the conference the necessity of sending troops to Dublin. He certainly had done so he declared, in interviews with Generals French and Friend.

The automobile has come to stay. No doubt about that at all. So it behooves us to get in line, and make the necessary changes to keep up with the times. Today there are specialists in all lines, and the auto specialist, one who makes a specialty of repairing autos, is not one of the least. Among those most prominent in that line we find JAMES ERICKSON, at 2247 Washington Ave. Mr. Erickson has been a good and reliable blacksmith a good many years in this town, but he sees the trend of the times, and while he is yet a good blacksmith and does a lot of work along that line, he has made himself proficient in automobile repairing. If there is any repairing to do on your machine, you could not do better than to let him fix it. Every bit of his work is guaranteed, and if the job doesn't please you, neither does it please him. Try him out, you can't make a mistake. —Advertisement.
