"FOR BETTER, FOR WORSE."

One thing was certain: The more the Rourke crowd hammered at David, the more bitter their attacks grew, the more consciousness they became in their "exposures" of David's "past" in the newspapers and otherwise, the closer Cora was determined to stick.

These were hard, hard days. But somehow the trouble served to show Cora Temple how much she really loved her husband. It was terrible beyond anything she had experienced to pick up the papers in the morning and see whole columns about David, his work at Colony Park, his name linked by innuendo with this woman and that, his professional honor subtly attacked. Oh, it was dreadful!

But, like most big troubles, it created a sort of strength with which to meet it. There were days when Cora felt a sort of glory in what she had to bear. She actually wanted to rush out into the crowded streets and shout her husband's innocence, and her own challenge for fate to do its worst. She could bear it! She could snap her fingers at it even! They would triumph in the end, for David was honorable and fine and good, and she knew it if nobody else did. Thus she steeled herself to strength and the semblance of cheerfulness.

There were days, too, when the echo of her marriage service rang in her ears—"for better or worse, for richer for poorer, in sickness and in health, till death do us part." She had often thought in her carefree days how little chance a wife in her circumstances had to prove her loyalty and love. It was so easy to be sweet and good and affectionate when all was going well.

Then had come the struggle with Rose Brett at Colony Park, and the crash, and now—But this was worst of all, this holding up of her beloved one before an unfeeling public to whom a man's guilt was all-absorbing, the possibility of his innocence of no importance.

At all events, if Cora wept in anguish as David and the good Dr. Hartley and other fine-spirited men who longed to see clean politics in the community waged their battle for the right she did it in secret.

Day after day she went about her homely household tasks, glorifying them by regarding them as her share in a real life battle, doing them with such "art" as she could bring to bear, praying silently in her soul that truth would triumph in the end and all come right.

Night after night David came home, weary and downcast or elated and triumphant, as the case might be. But always to find his wife brisk and bright and with something interesting to talk about apart from the subject weighing on both their minds. It was not an easy thing. Many a time Cora longed to give up the effort, but her head on David's breast and let him do the comforting. She was so tired, so tired.

She went out little, shrinking with all her troubled heart from the sympathetic expressions of her friends. She would have given much for a mother's hand to cry on. But her mother lived far away and knew nothing of this happening. Or a sister who would understand and quietly stand by. Or even a friend to whom she could pour out her heart and thus ease its aching. There seemed no one but Beth Woodford. And Cora felt she could not endure Beth's "I told you so."

So she took lonely outings instead, mingling with strangers on the street cars, sitting in sunny places in the parks where children played. Then one evening as she returned from a long tramp and a ride across the ferry she met a messenger boy just turning from her door. "Something for Temple?" she asked eagerly. "Yas'm; sign here."

Cora tore open the yellow envelope with thumping pulses. Her gaze flew to the name signed to the telegram. It was Carter Brett!

THINGS YOU WANT TO KNOW.

Nowadays we need not lose our balls of twine, for they are fascinatingly kept in sight an charming painted holders of wood and metal. One takes the form of a juggler apparently keeping the ball rolling on the tips of his toes. He costs $2.50. Then there is the smartly dressed young woman who has a ball of twine for a waist, quite fashionably substantial.

A lovely table centerpiece consisting of bowl for flowers and candlesticks, costs $26. There is a wide, shallow bowl, containing a crystal block to hold flower stems, at $8, and four candlesticks are in black and white stripes.

Three and a half dollars is the price of a china honey jar that is shaped like a beehive, with bees crawling over its outer surface in most realistic fashion.

A scarce 10 inches high is made on wood enameled in ebony and painted with gay flowers. It costs $2.50.

WOMEN TOOK A VERY PROMINENT PART IN THE PARADE

With the 1916 Harvest Festival and Fashion Show faded into a memory of color and gaiety, interest in the event that was arranged as the occasion of the formal opening of the fall and winter season in commercial, civic and social activities in the city is recalled by a review of some of the incidents which distinguished the festive gathering from those of the past.

A particularly interesting feature of the celebration just closed is the revelation that its scope had been broadened to include greater activity on the part of Ogdan club women in assisting in plans to make the event a success and to insure success of future fall festivals which have become an annual function within the portals of the city in the intermountain country that is attracting attention all over the nation.

This nation-wide interest is due to published news that the 1916 Harvest Festival and Fashion Show would be an occasion for furthering a celebration to take place in the city in 1919. This celebration will commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the completion of the first transcontinental railroad, which occurred at Promontory Point on May 10, 1869, when the golden spike was driven, uniting the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific into one continuous railway line. The celebration will have the character of an exposition of international scope.

Ogdan people are united in the effort to make the exposition a reality. This statement is attested to by the fact that all classes, all races, and both sexes are co-operating in the trend to spread the "Golden Wedding" gospel.

The complete success of the Fashion Show was insured when the executive committee made provision for the inclusion of women's clubs in arrangement activities. In accepting the invitation to participate, the executive officers of the City Federation of Clubs also agreed to the stipulated condition that the federation be represented in the patriotic parade, which was staged as one of the principal features of the first day's program.

Accordingly, the officers of the various clubs, through the City Federation of Clubs which consists of three members from each one of the individual six clubs in the city, were delegated the task of arranging for a representation in the patriotic pageant. And the representation which consisted of 200 girls, appropriately costumed, was deemed worthy of recognition.

The club representation formed a complete section of the parade. Marching four abreast to the music of the Mountain Echo band of girls from southern Utah, the girls in their uniformity of dress presented a beautiful spectacle. The costumes were in three colors, the white middie, white shoes, sashes of red and caps of blue. Letters of white, representing the various states in the Union, were made conspicuous by their setting of red, the color of the sash to which they were attached. Each one of the girls carried an American flag, showing that the arrangement committees had not overlooked the opportunity to display the evidence of the spirit of the pageant, which was the spirit of patriotism. The presence of Uncle Sam and Columbia in a float decorated with patriotic colors and wearing costumes that were consistent with the representation was also considered a worthy effort on the part of the club women to depict the spirit of the pageant. Uncle Sam was represented in the person of Morgan McKay and Columbia by Ortel Rich.

The officers of the City Federation of Clubs—Mrs. S. S. Smith, president; Mrs. A. B. Corey, secretary, and Mrs. Hyrum Smith, treasurer—said they were particularly grateful to William Purdy for letter designs appearing on the sashes worn by the girls, and to W. W. Brownrigg for furnishing the material from which the letters were made.

The six clubs from whose membership the City Federation is composed, and their presidents, are as follows: Child Culture—Mrs. Archie Bowman.

Historical society—Mrs. D. H. Adams.

Ladies' Literary society—Mrs. H. Bagley.

Home Culture—Mrs. Walter Moore.

Civic club—Mrs. F. W. Knisely.

Home Economics club of the Weber academy—Mrs. Tanner.

The president of the City Federation of Clubs is Mrs. S. S. Smith.

GREEK DANCES IMPRESS PROFESSORS

Miss Blankenhorn doing a Greek dance.

At the recent convention of the American Society of Professors of Dancing, Miss Ruth Blankenhorn, one of the foremost exponents of Greek dancing, demonstrated some of her favorite steps.

The club women could not have accomplished so much in the way of a representation in the pageant without the spirit of co-operation that manifested itself in perfecting the arrangements.

"We are thankful that the affair was as successful as it appeared to be," Mrs. Smith said modestly. "We did our best. The part we took is significant with the trend for broader recognition of women's right to participate in civic, social and commercial events—anything that looks toward uplifting the welfare of the social organization. It means that the women will have a greater part in future Fashion Shows. It means also that the federation is in sympathy with the movement to obtain an exposition. And it is certain that women will continue to clamor for a voice in public affairs. The federation proposes to take a greater part in local affairs as time moves on."

The official statement emphasizes the efficient work rendered by the aviators in furnishing "frequent and accurate reports" and with their machine guns engaging the German infantry and artillery.

GREATEST BATTLE NOW RAGING

London, Sept. 15.—The now famous German salient line Thiepval Combes is no longer.

The British tore it wide open today. In a 12-hour battle on an eight-mile front, from Thiepval to Ginchy, in the face of twelve hundred of the kaiser's most powerful guns—150 to a mile—they stormed, pierced, shattered and then occupied that stretch of the German front north of the Somme which hitherto had acted as a defiant block to their advance on Combes and Bapaume. The barrier broken down, Sir Douglas Haig's troops pushed beyond it to the northeast, carrying the menace of the Somme drive almost as ominously close to Bapaume as it is to Combes and Peronne.

Mighty Redoubt Taken.

The end of the fighting tonight saw the British in possession of practically all the high ground between Combes and the Albert-Poziere-Bapaume highway.

More than 2300 prisoners were taken, including 65 officers.

All this was achieved within a few hours after the German war office in its regular daily statement early this afternoon had announced that:

"An attempt by considerable British forces to recapture by an encircling movement our salient line south of Thiepval met with failure."

French Help Out.

The day was the most successful for the British since the initial phase of the Somme battle. For three days their infantry had enjoyed a comparative rest, while the artillery paved the way for today's new crush.

The French, though not launching an attack on a large front, worked hand in hand with the British in drawing the ring around Combes still closer. The French war office announced tonight that General Foch's troops took a system of German trenches five meters deep north of Le Priez farm, which fell into their hands yesterday. Last night the British took by storm a group of German trenches south of Ranocourt, two miles from Peronne. South of the Somme they cap-
