CANADA EASIER TO ENTER THAN SOME STATES In addressing a Rotary club luncheon in Victoria some time ago, Thaddeus M. Lane, president of the Inland Empire Automobile club, Spokane, said he was going to publish it far and wide, that it was easier to enter Canada than it was to enter some of the states in the United States. It is only during the past three days we have had letters from wealthy Americans in different parts of the United States, complimenting us upon the courtesy of our customs officials.

Regret Expressed. "We all regret to the utmost that our friends in charge of the Maxwell car should have had any trouble in connection with their trip to Canada, but knowing our officials as I do, these gentlemen must have made some error in conducting the business upon which they were engaged, as to constitute a breach of the extremely lenient customs regulations which have been provided in order to facilitate the entry into the Dominion of automobiles solely on pleasure bent and which are not intended in any way to cover the admission of cars, or of persons in charge of them, for business purposes.

"We cannot understand how any customs official could have acted as he is reported to have done, without being convinced that some such breach had been made; while at the same time we are perfectly certain that neither Mr. Waddell or Mr. Griffin had the slightest intention of committing any such breach and were probably not aware that they had done so.

"However, it would be very unjust to Canada and to our customs officials, if an incident like this should be allowed to prejudice tourists against making the tour through British Columbia, and 'The Island of a Thousand Miles of Wonderland,' reached from Victoria, B. C.

"We are daily in receipt of letters from all parts of the United States congratulating us upon our magnificent scenery, splendid roads and above all upon the ease with which our courteous customs officials allow them to enter our territory."

STILL SEARCHING FOR DREW MARSHALL OF OGDEN

Search for Drew Marshall, who mysteriously disappeared in the Bear River region, about thirteen miles west of Brigham City, Wednesday night, was continued again last night and today without avail. No traces other than tracks thought to have been made by him and which were found leading up to within fifteen feet of the river, where the duck shooting party of which he was a member, was encamped, were found by the authorities. In the belief that he was drowned the searching parties which are made up of the missing man's companions and authorities from the sheriff's offices of Box Elder and Weber counties dragged the river with grabhooks and seines last night. Today the searching parties were augmented by the addition of searchers who went to the shore from this point. Sheriff T. A. Devine departed for the duck grounds this morning. He was accompanied by William Greenwell, secretary of the Elks club, who with other companions of Mr. Marshall on the hunting expedition, was almost exhausted from the hours spent in the effort to find some traces of the lost man. George Leatham, deputy sheriff, accompanied by William Doyle and William Taylor, also departed for the Bear River district this morning, leaving the city shortly after 10 o'clock. Mr. Doyle, who had been assisting in the search, returned to the city last night. During the night long poles equipped with hooks on one end to be used in probing the river in search for the body were secured by him. Mr. Doyle said he believed that a more effective search could be made in the river with the poles than with either grabhooks attached to ropes or seines. He said the current at the point where some believed Mr. Marshall had gone down to be too swift to allow grabhooks or seines to sink, or to reach the bottom of the stream. It was stated by the authorities today that the search would be continued until they were convinced that further efforts to find the missing man would be considered useless.

BAMBERGER AT HEADQUARTERS

Simon Bamberger, Democratic nominee for governor, told women of the Women's Woodrow Wilson club at a meeting in Democratic headquarters in the De-Eccles building this afternoon, that if elected he would stand squarely on the Democratic platform which pledged the party to enact a state-wide prohibition measure and then to see that it is enforced. Among other things he told that the women of the state should support the entire state ticket because in so doing they were helping to obtain an organization that would insure President Wilson the proper support in preserving the stability of the nation in the future and to keep us out of war. "There is no doubt of President Wilson's re-election," the nominee said.

RELIGION AND THE ELECTIONS

Religion and politics have ever had a common end in bettering life. The church has been always given a place as one of the three oldest institutions in history. Authorities differ as to whether the church or the state first followed that, in the selection and work of ruling officers, the religion of the day has had much to do. This is seen in the history of the development of the method of election of presidents of this country. No more fascinating story is found in the history of peoples than to elect its presidents. The religious significance of the Election of a President is the Sunday night theme in Presbyterian church. The music will be: Prelude, "Nocturn".....Chopin Miss Louise Pierce. Solo, "The Service of Today," Lansing Mrs. Agnes Warner. Violin obituary, "Swan Song".....Bizet Miss Ida Anderson. Solo, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go".....Miss Martha Chausse. Postlude, "Theme in F".....Leybach Miss Pierce.

THOMAS A. EDISON WALL STREET WOMEN WILSON SUPPORTER TOUR FOR HUGHES

Some weeks after the two conventions, I interviewed Thomas A. Edison on industrial preparedness, a movement to which he has been giving much of his time and thought. Something that he said gave very plain indication of his admiration of Woodrow Wilson, and although I knew that he always had been a Republican, I ventured to ask him whether or not he had "made up his mind" between Mr. Wilson and Mr. Hughes. "Not yet," He shook his head impatiently. "Wait until we see what this man Hughes has got to offer." On the day of Mr. Hughes' final speech in California, the wind-up of his coast-to-coast campaign tour, I made a second trip to West Orange. "Well, Mr. Edison," I began, "I've read your speech, and I'm interrupted. Leaning back so as to gain ingress, he pushed his hand into his trousers pocket—the old-fashioned kind that opens at the top, not the side—and drew out a bunch of crumpled yellow paper. "There!" he said. "Everything's right here." He smoothed them out—four or five sheets torn from a cheap tablet—all written over in pencil, the writing firm and curiously like old English print. Glancing through them, I saw that he had merely jotted down a number of flat statements of political belief. "But what about a discussion of these issues, Mr. Edison?" I urged. "The people of the United States feel that you—"

"Shucks!" With his fingers he wiggled the compliment away from him. "I say that I'm for Woodrow Wilson. I say it because I feel that it's up to every man in times like these to take a position. But, please!" He shook his head. "It's just my opinion." "Mr. Edison has always been a Republican," suggested W. L. Saunders, the mining engineer, who was present; "and—"

"Don't put in anything about party," Mr. Edison caught the suggestion and dissented vigorously. "Times are too serious to talk in terms of Republicanism or Democracy. Parties are all right. Reckon we've got to have them with our system of government. But when it's America that's at stake, men have got to vote as Americans, and not as Democrats or Republicans. "Many Big Problems to Solve. "This man Wilson has had a mighty hard time of it," he continued. "I don't believe there was ever a president who had as many big questions to decide, as many big problems to solve. One has followed the other, and now and then they have come in bunches. He hasn't always pleased me, just as I suppose he hasn't always pleased other people, but when you look the record over, it's so good that criticism comes close to being nothing more than cheap fault finding. "A fool or a coward would have had the United States in all sorts of trouble. As it is, we are at peace, the country was never more prosperous, and we have the strength that comes with honor and integrity of purpose. "So you don't agree with these people who insist that the United States has earned the contempt of the world?" I asked. "Boh! Neutrality is a mighty trying policy, but back of it are international law, the rights of humanity and the whole future of civilization. Wilson has won victories by diplomacy that are far more important to mankind than any victories that he could have won by war. I am no pacifist. I believe that there are times when a nation has got to fight. But war for the sake of war, or war for purposes of conquest is horrible and unthinkable."

"As I said at the start," he continued, "it has just been one big thing after another with Wilson. I have never known so many dangerous questions brought up for decision to any one president. Look at the general railroad strike that piled up on top of Mexico and all the other things. Why, if carried through, such a strike would throw the whole country into confusion, and would prove a calamity that, in certain eventualities, would have disastrous results bound to extend over a long period of time. I think he rose to the occasion splendidly, just as he has risen to every other occasion that called for courage and wisdom, and is doing the best he can. "In my opinion, Mr. Hughes, if president, would have found it difficult to decide on the best course for the government to take in such matters. His capacity for hindsight, as we learn from his speeches, is highly developed, but as to his foresight, we are not equally well informed. "Working all day and far into the night, as he does, the wonder is that Mr. Edison finds time to do any reading at all. And yet it is almost impossible to touch with any present subject with which he is not familiar. "They say Wilson has blundered." He raised both hands to drive home his point. "Perhaps he has. But I notice that he usually blunders FORWARD."

He rocked on his heels for a second, and then, even as his hands reached out to take some papers from a secretary, he finished with this declaration: "Mr. Wilson has now had about four years of experience, and I think that he has earned faith and trust. I do not think it a logical or sensible thing to change to an inexperienced and untried man just for the sake of change, or without much better reason being given for the change than any I have noticed. "Rosevelt was my choice. He had had experience, and his own, the best American, but the machine-controlled Republican party would not have him. Therefore, I am for Woodrow Wilson."
