YOUR DAUGHTER'S CONFIDENCE

By DOROTHY DIX, The World's Highest Paid Woman Writer

A mother writes: "Will you please tell me how I can gain and hold the confidence of my 15-year-old daughter. I feel very much hurt because she tells things to a neighbor that she never mentions to me, and talks very much more freely with this comparative stranger than she does with her own mother."

Dear lady, you are just fifteen years too late in starting out to win your child's confidence. Someone has said that to make a gentleman you must begin with a man's grandfather. Certainly if you ever expect to be chums with your children you must begin when they are in the cradle.

Whenever grown-up children are not confidential with their parents it is the parents' fault. Every baby runs instinctively with its little joys and sorrows, its little plans and hopes, to its mother and father, and it depends upon the way in which the parents receive and respect these infantile confidences whether or not the big boy and girl tell everything to mother or father.

Whenever this habit is broken up and the children cease coming to mother and father with their little tales of what has happened to them, and their little thoughts, it is because mother and father have faltered them in some way or have proven untrustworthy.

Parents take a high and mighty attitude toward their children's confidences. They think they have a right to them, and to be told all that the child thinks and does. This is not so. Even a child's soul is his own and nobody has a right to look into that holy of holies except upon invitation, and if parents have forfeited this privilege through their blundering or carelessness, the blame is theirs, not the child's.

Parents forget in dealing with their children that confidence is only possible between people of sympathy and understanding. Even a grown person cannot tell anything to another unless he is sure that the other is going to get his point of view in the matter and feel about it as he does.

You never tell your plans but once to a person who puts a veto on everything that you were intending to do.

You never drag out your little, tender, budding aspirations but once before a person who throws over you a wet blanket that leaves you chilled to the bone. You never tell some intimate, sacred secret but once to a person who deprecates your revelation with ribald laughter. You never talk about your real self at all to the person who chatters and tells everything.

If that is true of the grown-up, it is 10,000 times more true of the child, because a child's soul is 10,000 times more sensitive than a grown person's. Life makes callouses on our souls even as it does upon our feet, but a child's soul is still so tender and delicate it bleeds at a rough touch.

And parents are too stupid to realize this or to see that the reason their children do not confide in them is because they have acted in such a way as to effectually shut off all confidence.

Why should little Johnny tell you that he is planning to build a playhouse in the back yard when experience has taught him that you will be sure to say "don't," and that you won't have the back yard cluttered up with trash, whereas if he goes on and builds it without taking you into his confidence in the matter, you will probably never notice it, or else think it rather clever of him to have done such a bit of carpentry work.

It would have added immeasurably to Johnny's pleasure in the matter if he could have confided his plans to you and you had been interested enough in it to talk it over with him and make suggestions and perhaps help a little. The superstition that it is the proper thing for parents to always object on principle to anything children want to do is responsible for half of the lack of confidence between boys and girls and their fathers and mothers.

You may be very sure that the man who enters your house heartily into his boys' plans, who lets them feel that he is thrillingly interested in their games and their lessons and their school chums and their fights, and who never objects to anything they want to do that isn't actually wrong or unwise, never has to complain that he isn't in his boys' confidence. Why, dad's their best friend, and their first impulse is to tell him everything.

And why should Mamie tell her mother anything when she knows beforehand that mother is going to be shocked and say that girls never did that way in her day? Or worse still, mother laughs and blabs.

Mamie told mother about a little boy that she met at the dancing class, and he said he thought she had the prettiest curls he ever saw, and he wrote his name on her fan, and he walked part of the way home with her, and he was a perfectly lovely little boy and his name was Percy.

It was Mamie's first romance, the first flutter of the embryo wings of her womanhood, and when Mamie told it to mother she opened the very doors of her shy little soul and let mother look in at mysteries that Mamie herself was too young to know were there.

And the next night at dinner, before a whole table full of people, mother told the story of Mamie's first beau and the grown-ups guffawed with laughter, and Mamie was sent away from the table in disgrace. And mother didn't have enough intelligence to know that with her own brutal hand she had closed forever the door of her little daughter's confidences.

Mamie will never tell mother again anything that matters. Perhaps there will be times when it might be her very salvation if she could talk freely to her mother and ask her mother's guidance in some vital affair of her life, but she can't do it. There is a wall of reserve between them and there is no woman in the whole world to whom she could not talk more freely than she can to her own mother.

Mothers weep because their daughters won't confide in them. They have a right to weep over their own stupidity because it's their own fault. Every girl would like to chum with her mother if she could. You can see this in the envy they express over a girl whose mother is her best friend, and to whom not only she, but all the other girls, tell things.

But how can you tell things to a mother who is not sympathetic, who doesn't see why you want to sit out in the moonlight in the dew with Johnny Jones and risk catching cold, when you might sit with the family in a perfectly well lighted, waterproof living room? How could you tell a mother that Tommy Tucker kissed you if she was the sort of a mother that would read you a certain lecture about it? Or how could you confide in a mother who was sure to laugh that you are thinking about joining the movies? You would have to have years of trusted and tried understanding and sympathy behind you before you would tell any of these things.

That's why you can't gain a girl's or boy's confidence after they are 15 years old. It's too late.

Low Cost Dishes for High Cost Days

Vegetable and salad plants are becoming plentiful, especially in country districts, and those who have their own garden produce may be particularly glad of hints on salad dressings and simple recipes for cooking vegetables.

Asparagus
Pick off the loose leaves, scrape the stalks and wash them in cold water; cut all the stalks the same length and tie them together in small bundles, the heads all the same way.

Put the asparagus into hot water with a little salt, and boil gently for about twenty minutes till tender, taking care not to break the heads. Serve with melted butter with a few drops of lemon juice in it.

French Beans
Two pounds of French beans, two ounces of butter, pepper and salt, nutmeg, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley (parboiled), the juice of half a lemon.

Method—Pick and string the beans, cutting each bean into three or four strips. Wash them well in cold water, drain them and put them into a saucepan with the stock, butter and sugar, and simmer gently for about half an hour.

Remove the carrots when cooked, then reduce the stock to a demiglace. Arrange the carrots neatly in a vegetable dish, pour over the demiglace sauce and sprinkle over the chopped parsley.

Young Carrots
One bunch of spring carrots, one ounce of butter, one teaspoonful of castor sugar, three-quarters to one pint of stock, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley.

Method—Wash and scrape the carrots, boil them in water with a little salt for about ten minutes, put them into cold water and dry them in a cloth, and if necessary scrape them a second time. Then put them into a saucepan with the stock, butter and sugar, and simmer gently for about half an hour.

Remove the carrots when cooked, then reduce the stock to a demiglace. Arrange the carrots neatly in a vegetable dish, pour over the demiglace sauce and sprinkle over the chopped parsley.

ROLL FOR TABLECLOTH

Use two round pasteboard boxes, such as are used to contain baking powder or hominy, and a piece of cardboard, wide enough to slip the round box over it and long enough to wrap the tablecloth over when folded lengthwise. Cover with muslin or paper. This is an easy way to keep the linen and saves a great deal of time on ironing day.

SMART FADS

Japanese embroideries are seen even on sports coats of jersey silk. Girdles made of beads are a pretty addition to the straight frocks. Even tinted Irish lace is to be seen on afternoon and evening gowns.

Georgette crepe combinations are trimmed with bands of liberty satin. Long blouses suggesting smocks are made of sheer handkerchief linen. Princess slips to wear under lingerie dresses are made of pink or orange.

Some of the loveliest hats of the season are the soft shirred crepes and malines.

CHAMOIS BOOTEES

Chamois is sometimes used for booties for baby, and several clever mothers save all the upper sections of their long kid gloves and use them for the same purpose. Kid gloves are generally worn out first in the fingers or palm, and the upper part of the carded gloves is usually in good condition and is easily converted into soft, comfortable booties.

Select a simple pattern and if it is a paper pattern with embroidery only the latter, use carbon paper and trace only the outer lines, then cut out with scissors. Make a plain edge, or cut it round in the form of scallops.

When chamois or kid is used work a loose buttonhole or blanket stitch around the edge, placing the stitches quite some distance apart. This prevents the leather from stretching and makes the booties prettier. The sole and seam should be overcast with small stitches on the right side. The stitching should be of the same color as the leather or a shade darker and ribbon should be used to lace the bootie and hold it in its place.

SUMMER LAMPS

Lamps look very well in summer homes, amid summer furnishings.

Some are Japanese and of brown wicker.

The bases and shades are lined with silk.

There are rose and tan and other shades—all pleasing to the eye and shedding a soft, pretty light.

DRESSES, GLOVES, SILKS AND SUITS

Tells women how to dry clean everything with gasoline and save $5.

It is very easy and inexpensive to dry clean and brighten all the ribbons, laces, yokes, neckties, silks, net work, satins, shirts, gloves, shoes, furs, children's clothes, suits, caps, woolen garments, fancy vests, Swiss, lawn, organdie and chiffon dresses, draperies, ruffs, in fact, any and everything that would be ruined with soap and water.

Get two ounces of solvite at any drugstore and put it in two gallons of gasoline, where it immediately dissolves. Then immerse the goods to be cleaned; rub a little and out they come looking bright and fresh as new. You will find nothing fades, shrinks or wrinkles, requiring no pressing.

These few moments' work saves any household five to ten dollars. Try it and you will find dry cleaning just as easy as laundering. Your grocer or any garage will supply the gasoline and the drug store will furnish the solvite which is simply a gasoline soap. Then a wash boiler or large dishpan completes your home dry cleaning outfit.—Advertisement.

GOVERNOR IS BACK FROM CONFERENCE

SALT LAKE, Aug. 15.—That governors of the northwestern states are favorably disposed toward a more liberal policy on the part of the federal government with reference to forest ranges is the report brought by Governor Bamberger from an informal conference of northwestern governors held last Saturday at Portland, Ore. Governor Bamberger returned to Salt Lake last night.

The meeting was called by Governor Lister of Washington, president of the northwestern conference, for the purpose of discussing matters pertaining to war and war preparations, and the question of a more liberal policy with reference to the forest ranges was brought up in connection with the food problem. The position of the sheepmen on the problem of saving the lambs through a more liberal use of the forest ranges was well

POLICE MAKE A RAID AND UNCOVER MUCH WHISKEY

SALT LAKE, Aug. 15.—Last night police officers, armed with axes and crowbars, ripped up the floor of a first-story room in a rooming house at 576 West First South street and uncovered a liquor cache containing approximately 600 cases of whiskey, the estimated value of which, at prevailing prohibition prices, was given by the police as about $25,000.

T. Martin, landlord of the house, who zealously assisted the police in bringing the liquor to light and at the time of the raid gave up an appearance of being innocent of any complicity in the "bootlegging" enterprise, was arrested several hours later when officers caught him in the act of removing an additional quantity of whiskey and some beer from a second-story room to the basement. The liquor was seized under the provisions of the new prohibition statute.

Two other raids by Officers W. H. Hurst and John Donnelly completed the day's campaign. Late in the afternoon they seized one gallon of grape brandy, one gallon of Jamaica rum and two gallons of whiskey in a rooming house conducted by Theodore Roseta, an Austrian, at 552 West Second South street. Roseta was arrested. His bank book, according to the arresting officers, showed heavy deposits since August 1. The police suspect Roseta of having a large cache of liquor hidden somewhere in the city.

Still Further Seizures.
Late last night Officers Hurst and Donnelly seized a trunk and several suitcases filled with liquor at 123 South Fifth West street. Five Greeks—J. Poulas, N. G. Mackos, Gou Triun, Pitt Garg and Tom Fortunas—were arrested.

taken by the conference. The governors were unanimous in the opinion that every effort should be made to conserve the nation's meat supply and favored extraordinary steps to protect the sheep industry.

Discuss I. W. W.
One of the most important discussions of the meeting centered about the activities of the I. W. W. A comparison of conditions in the various states of the northwest indicated that Montana was probably the chief sufferer from the activities of the followers of the red flag.

The comparison showed that Utah was probably the least affected by labor troubles of any state in the conference. Governor Bamberger informed the meeting that anything in the nature of trouble of a negligible character and that the state was practically free from agitation because of the activities of the I. W. W.

"KIDDED" WILSON.

She is one of the most obliging telephone operators at one of the most popular hotels in Washington. But she thinks she knows when she is being "kidded." So when a masculine voice called the other day and asked for a very distinguished guest at the hotel she inquired the name.

"Woodrow Wilson," came back over the phone.

Now, this is an old gag, and it doesn't go any more.

"Well, Woodie, old top, how are you?" she gently chided. "You haven't called up for several days. You don't know how I have missed your sweet voice over the wire. Where have you been?"

The voice said it would like to have the call, and seemed oblivious to the telephone girl's taffy.

"Oh, I'm getting him all right. But really, Woodie, don't you think you have been neglecting me of late?"

She made up her mind she would make him very tired of such silly effort to fool a tired bello girl.

By and by the response came and she heard things that worried her. She looked thoughtful and chewed her mint more vigorously.

"I wonder if it could be," she mused. Nervously she called the White house. One of the secret service men responded.

"Please have you a call there for our hotel recently?"

After a minute's delay the reply came back.

"Yes. The President has been talking to the hotel."

"Oh, Gawd!" was the gurgling reply.—Des Moines Register.
