

FUNNY AS IT LOOKS IT'S SERIOUS BUSINESS. THIS BAYONET DRILL

A test of skill.

All members of the infantry divisions of our national army are required to undergo an arduous training in bayonet fighting. This important factor of trench fighting has been strongly emphasized by our allied instructors who have come to this country to teach our boys in camp. Although there is a tinge of competition connected with this drill, the men have taken it up very seriously, realizing the advantage of being well acquainted in the ins and outs of bayonet fighting. The photo was taken at an American training camp.

GREATER SAVING MUST BE MADE IN FOOD SUPPLIES NAMES OF ALIENS ON REGISTRY NOT TO BE PUBLISHED

W. W. Armstrong, state food administrator, has received a telegram from the national administration announcing that instructions as to a greater saving had been sent to the chairman of the hotel and restaurant committees of the forty-eight states, George O. Rolf, chairman of the committee in Utah, through the message referred to.

Late yesterday a telegram was received by United States Marshal Aquila Nebeker from United States Attorney Gregory, Washington, D. C., directing that the information contained in the registration blanks be considered confidential and must not be made public, and advising him that the names and addresses of registrants must not be published.

The message to the state food administrator, as well as to Mr. Rolf, read as follows: "Friday and Wednesday wheatless, Tuesday meatless, Saturday porkless, one meatless and one wheatless meal each day. Portion of bread or rolls should consist of not more than two ounces, and not more than this quantity should be served to any one person at any one meal."

According to this ruling the names of registrants will not be made public until after the expiration of fifteen days after the close of registration next Saturday night, when all to whom it has been decided to give registration cards will have received them.

Several hundred of the wealthiest families in New York city have voluntarily placed themselves on "ration" during the period of the war. At their request the national food administration prepared a program for them and they have agreed to follow it. The "ration" follows:

It may also be considered by the government that enemy aliens who are conducting themselves as spies will seek registration cards. As all registrations are carefully scrutinized and investigated if the slightest reason develops, the process of registration may result in ferreting out such undesirable persons and terminate in their internment. In every manner the United States is safeguarding itself against possible contingencies and secrecy is regarded as the surest method.

Only one-half pound of butter will be allowed each person for an entire week. This includes butter used in cooking as well as on the table. The ration of "red meats" is held down to two and one-half pounds per week, and of this only one-half pound may be pork, or any of its products. Only one-half pound of cooking and kitchen fats may be used for each person per week. This must be in the form of margarine, lard substitutes, corn oil, cottonseed oil, peanut oil, olive oil or other vegetable fats.

The bread ration is held down to three pounds a week and must be "Victory" bread, which contains at least 20 per cent of flour other than wheat flour. In other words, the white flour ration is held down to two and one-quarter pounds. In addition, there is a weekly allowance of one-half pound of flour to be used in cooking, for making gravies and sauces.

Only three-fourths of a pound of sugar may be used each week. This includes sugar in every form, for table or cooking, in candy or in sweetmeats, but does not embrace that used for canning or preserving.

These suggestions practically cut to a minimum the amount of exportable foodstuffs that could be adopted, except by gradual reduction by wealthy families without serious sacrifices. They are not limited in the consumption of substitutes for these foods or of other foodstuffs not needed in Europe, except that they can use cream only on the table—not for cooking.

In the "as much as desired" class are placed all forms of sea food, poultry and game, non-wheat cereals, such as cornmeal, oatmeal, rice, hominy, barley and rye, all fresh and dried vegetables and milk.
