In a man's disposition as a hot poultice bring out the measles, and there are other women who call forth all that is finest and most chivalrous in a man's nature.

There are tactless women who take the time when a man is hungry, cross and worried to ask favors of him and tell him that they have bought a forty dollar hat. There are other wives who wait the psychological moment when a man is fed, and soothed, and comforted to tap his pocket book, and get whatever they want.

So there you are, and when a woman tries to do up on how she will be treated as a No. 2 wife she must take her own temperament into consideration as well as the man's.

Not Popular

They say laced shoes for general wear and buttoned shoes for dress, but we are reasonably sure that buttoned shoes will not be extremely popular this season.

The Old Gardener Says:

That some of the shallow rooted annuals may be used without doing any harm in the beds where the tulips and other spring bulbs have flowered. Perhaps the very best subject for such a purpose is the lavender, or annual mallow. This is really a handsome plant which ought to be better known.

LAUNDERING QUILTS

An easy way to wash quilts is to make a lather with hot water and soap and add a little liquid ammonia. Steep the quilt in this for ten minutes, then squeeze well and work with hands in the water till perfectly clean.

MODISH IDEAS

Soft white laces embroidered in silver are favored for evening wear. The latest coat is a combination of a tight, scant skirt and a full, loose top.

KITCHEN HINTS

Use a little water to moisten pastry as possible, and it will be "short," never "down the miller."

ISAAC N. PIERCE OF OGDEN HEAD OF MOVEMENT

SALT LAKE, June 6—Immediate action to secure the insertion in the soldiers' settlement bill, now pending before congress, of provisions which will more adequately take care of the requirements of Utah and the other arid states of the west, was begun at a conference held yesterday noon in the Commercial club.

Arrangements were made for another meeting, to be held at 12:30 o'clock next Monday in the Commercial club, when Utah's ideas on the subject will be drafted and a committee appointed to go at once to Washington and lay the matter before the public lands committee of congress, of which Senator Smoot is chairman, and before the secretary of the interior.

A project which will ultimately mean the development of 2,000,000 acres of land, all lying within 75 miles of Salt Lake, Ogden and Provo, was urged as the greatest possible project for Utah to take up under the soldiers' settlement act. This project, which has been considered at various times for the last ten years by Utah men who are familiar with reclamation problems, contemplates impounding the flood waters of the Weber and Provo rivers for distribution in Weber, Davis, Salt Lake, Utah and Tooele counties.

Armstrong Optimistic.

"There is no one thing that would do the whole state as much good as the development of the Provo-Weber project," Mr. Armstrong declared. "It would also have the advantage of providing rural homes for our service men within easy distance of the largest cities of the state, in locations which I feel sure would meet their approval. However, this soldiers' settlement matter is one which, I believe, should have the earnest consideration of Utah men themselves. Personally, I want to hear them tell us what they want, and then it is up to us to get them anything they desire that is long legitimate lines. They did their share. Now that they have returned it is our duty to do what we can to assist them in developing their own and the state's resources."

Mr. Wallace said he believed the Provo-Weber project could be constructed for a total of $15,000,000, and the value of the lands thus brought under water and cultivation could be conservatively estimated at $50,000,000.

Returns in One Year.

Figuring that the land would produce crops valued at $75 an acre each year, Mr. Wallace directed attention to the fact that if 2,000,000 acres were put under such a project the crop of one year would pay for the cost of the undertaking.

Mr. Wallace also outlined the proposed Castle Peak project in Utah basin as a soldiers' settlement possibility, although a bill now before congress seeks an appropriation whereby this project would be constructed by the reclamation service.

Several delegates from the state caucus of the American Legion attended the luncheon and expressed the views of the soldiers on the question. Baldwin Robertson, state secretary, said he believed there was much to be said in favor of the Provo-Weber project, because it would provide rural homes within easy access of the larger cities of the state. The men who had been in service, he believed, would be better satisfied with such a location than they would if a community project were constructed in a remote part of the state.

Officers Elected.

Isaac N. Pierce of Ogden, member of the state house of representatives, was elected chairman of the conference, and J. Leo Meehan, a representative of the American Legion, was elected secretary. Invitations were extended to representatives of the Salt Lake and Provo Commercial clubs, the Weber club of Ogden, of the county commissioners of Tooele, Davis and Utah counties, of the Colorado River Development association and the American Legion of Utah to attend the final meeting which is to be held next Monday.

A conference of members of the soldiers' settlement commissions of Utah, Idaho and Nevada will be held in the office of the governor at the capitol this afternoon.

Details to be Given Out

CHICAGO, June 6—Full details of the merger of eight independent packing companies, announced in New York last night, will be given out about June 12, according to John A. Hawkins, who has resigned as a vice president of Wilson and company in order to head the new corporation. Mr. Hawkins said today that the capitalization of the new concern had not been set definitely and that the figure of $165,000,000 given out in New York was a mistake.

"The capitalization will be large, necessarily, and will be ample to take care of the needs of the company," said Mr. Hawkins.

Dorothy Dix Talks

NO. 1 AND NO. 2 WIVES

By DOROTHY DIX, the World's Highest Paid Woman Writer.

A woman writes me that a widower has asked her to marry him. The man is highly eligible from a worldly point of view, and the lady finds him a tender and ardent suitor, but she knows that he was cold and neglectful, and parsimonious to his first wife. Therefore she is afraid to take a chance on him, and she wants to know what sort of a matrimonial risk I consider him.

That is a question that nobody can answer, for the way of a man with a maid which Holy Writ declares to be one of the two insoluble riddles of nature, is as nothing compared with the mystery of the way of a husband with his wife.

In ordinary affairs it is a safe rule to judge a man by his past performance, and to conclude that he who has been honest in his previous dealings will go on being honest in his future transactions; that truthful James will remain truthful James, and Ananias will still be Ananias to the end of the chapter.

This rule, however, does not apply to a man's conduct towards his wife, and because a man has been a bad husband to one wife is no sign that he will be a bad husband to another one. Indeed, sometimes it seems that quite the reverse of this is true, and all of us can point to numerous cases, in our own knowledge, of men who were brutish to their first wives and angels to their second wives.

It is a matter of common observation that the second wife spends what the first wife saved, and that men are almost invariably much more indulgent to their second wives than they were to their first, and treat them with far greater tenderness and consideration.

All of us have seen men who had been stingy with their first wives loosen up and be lavish with their second wives. We have seen men who broke their first wives' hearts by their philandering with other women suddenly become as domestic as the house cat when they got married again. We have seen men who never paid their first wives a compliment, or bestowed any token of affection upon them, turn into ardent lovers to their second wives, and so it is a case of you never can tell whether a man's attitude towards his first wife is a warning or a guarantee of how he will act in his second matrimonial venture.

There are a good many reasons why a man is likely to treat his second wife better than he did his first. One is conscience. The reason that many a second wife is pampered is because a man is trying to liquidate his debt of remorse for the way he treated one woman by being good to another woman.

There are thousands of men who never realize how cruel they had been to their wives until they looked down upon their dead faces and knew that they could never unsay the bitter words they had flashed out in moments of irritation; that nothing they could do could ever bring a smile to those still lips again, that it was far ever too late to put into those folded hands the little gifts for which they had so longed.

It is above many a confined form that a man swears that if he ever takes another woman's life into his keeping that he will cherish it, and be more faithful to his trust than he was to the first one, and it is the result of this repentance that wife No. 2 catches in.

Another reason why a man is likely to treat his second wife better than he did his first is because he brings to his second marriage all the hard won knowledge of women and matrimony that he gained in his first experience. First wives are like first children. They, poor things, have to bear the brunt of all of a man's theories about the duties of wives, and the exalted position of a husband in a household, and so on. By the time a man has killed one wife with his experiments he has found out that marriage is not a theory but a condition, and, most of all, it is a series of compromises, and that the proper position of the husband in the home is not that of the tyrant on the hearth, but the salve spreader.

Also he has ascertained that it takes money upon which to run a family, and he does not quarrel with wife No. 2 as he did with wife No. 1 because she isn't a miracle worker who can get up a good dinner on thin air. It takes years of time, and first hand knowledge, to teach a man how to be just to his wife about money, and that the way to manage her is by jollying her. Then, only, is he really fit to be a husband. The accomplishment generally comes too late to be of any service to the first wife, but it's a godsend to the second.

This, also, is to be said: That the way in which a man treats his wife depends largely upon the woman herself, so it is not always fair to assume that because a man has been a bad husband to one woman he will be a bad husband to another. There are women who bring out all that is worst
