

Escaped Prisoners of War Are Captured During the Night

Chief of Police, Ogden:

"A number of prisoners escaped from the war prison barracks at Ft. Douglas, please hold all suspicious characters. Notify commandant war prison barracks, Ft. Douglas. Descriptions will follow."

"Thus read a telegram received at an early hour this morning at the police station and at 3 o'clock, Sergeant A. B. Jensen, accompanied by Officers Patton, Noble, Taylor, Lowder and Conroy captured four suspects north of the depot on Wall avenue. The men, it proved later, were four of seventeen prisoners who had made good their escape from the war prison barracks at Ft. Douglas by tunneling a distance of 120 feet under the stockade, according to Paul Seidler, who the police say, acknowledged having engineered the escape."

The other men were Fred Cook of Seattle, Harry Sulk of San Francisco, and Joe Kolonick of Seattle. Seidler claimed Hungary as his native land, while Sulk said he formerly lived in Sweden. The other men said that they were from Austria."

According to the story told a Standard reporter by Seidler, the work of digging had been going on for a month. Completing the work recently, the men made good their escape by crawling through the tunnel and then snaking themselves for a mile and a half toward Salt Lake, when they separated. Each went his own way, but, by chance, Seidler and his fellow prisoners boarded the same freight train for Ogden. As a result, they were easily captured by the officers."

While the men were talkative concerning their escape, the length of the tunnel and other details of their escape, they would give no information as to how they concealed the dirt which they took from the tunnel. Seidler, who acted as spokesman for the quartette, when questioned concerning the whereabouts of the thirteen prisoners who escaped, said "there are fifty roads out of Salt Lake." Aside from this statement, he could offer no information.

The men have been in prison from six to eighteen months. Talks of Escape. Seidler, in talking of the escape, said: "I took extremely dangerous chances for my liberty, as two machine guns, a soldier walking his post on sentry duty, and a battery of four searchlights menaced us with death or serious injury after we had escaped. "We were alien enemies while the war was on and now, because we do not wish repatriation, are not released from prison. The majority of the prisoners at the fort during the war had been against Prussianism since they were mere children but, as the Prussian element gained power, answered their call to duty, thus becoming the victims of circumstances."

The man seemed to feel that he had committed no crime against the United States and that the fact that he had served German interests while in this country should be no reason for his deportation, or rather, as he explained it, his repatriation.

"Newspapers do us an injustice," he said, "in saying that several of our numbers are deported when they are sent from the fort to other countries. This is not true. We are given our choice of remaining prisoners or of being sent to our native lands, which many of us hate." As another instance of how the Germans and other alien enemies viewed things, Seidler recalled an incident that occurred a short time ago at Ft. Douglas when some prisoners were punished for an alleged attempt to shoot a guard. That the shooting occurred, was admitted by Seidler and explained by him that "no effort had been made to shoot the guard. The shooting was just a little trouble which arose among the prisoners themselves."

A Former Attempt. Another incident of the prison barracks was related by Seidler, who told how an attempt to tunnel from the guard house at Ft. Douglas was prevented. Seidler, it seems, was confined with a number of other prisoners who were sentenced to bread and water. By signalling in the prisoner's code to more fortunate comrades, the men in the guard house obtained a file. After having obtained the file, they decided that a tunnel was more feasible as a means of getting away than to saw out.

MAN IN JAIL BREAKS UP THE COUNTY FURNITURE

Erwin Huller, the soldier who was returned to Ogden a few days ago from Fort Logan, Colo., after he had enlisted in the army at Ogden, became violent at the county jail last night and today. During the early hours of the morning he attempted to tear out the padding and plumbing in the padded cell. Later he was placed in one of the smaller cells and wrenched loose the pipes.

All efforts to quiet the man whose ravings disturbed two courts and the board of county commissioners, proved of no avail.

"Why don't you be good?" asked Deputy Sheriff Blackburn.

"I can't, I'm a Republican. If I wasn't, I wouldn't be like this."

The reply caused the deputy, also a Republican, to reach the conclusion that Huller is a Democrat.

During the morning, Vincente Aragon, a Mexican, waiting trial for burglary, went to the cell to hand something to Huller, and Huller reached through the bars and with both hands took a firm hold on the underwear of the Mexican and tore the union suit off the man's back before he could break loose from the insane man's clutches.

Huller will be examined as to his sanity by a board this afternoon.

In the meantime, while the tunnel was under construction, prison authorities discovered that the prisoners had a file and a search ensued. Seidler said that the dirt, which they had been packing between the floor of the upper room of the guard house, and the ceiling of the room in which they were confined, was discovered when a detail of soldiers searched for the file. Even though a captured alien war prisoner, the attitude of Seidler and his companions would have led one to believe that they were American citizens who had met with an affront while in their country. While no word as to the disposition of the prisoners was available this forenoon, it is expected that authorities from the war prison barracks will arrive in Ogden this afternoon to accompany the prisoners back to the fort.
