RUSS LABOR LEADERS AGAINST BOLSHEVISM

Former Premier Kerensky Believes Allied Governments Played into Hands of Reds

MANCHESTER, Eng. Jan. 31.—Alexander Kerensky, former Russian premier in an interview published by the Manchester Guardian, said he had seen the declaration of the labor leaders regarding Russia, and that he considered it very serious and symptomatic particularly as it came from men whom nobody could suspect of sympathy with Bolshevism.

Regarding his own attitude and that of his political friends towards the Bolshevik government in Russia, M. Kerensky said there had been no change in it and that they would continue to combat bolshevism in the name of Democracy and of the working classes and that he believed they would be successful if the allied governments would not interfere.

Allied Nations Mistake
He thought those governments had been playing into the hands of the Bolsheviks for two years.

To a suggestion that he once favored intervention in Russia, Kerensky agreed. But he said different circumstances prevailed at that period.

Kerensky said that since the armistice he had been opposed to intervention. He recalled that last summer he had addressed the peace conference and public opinion in the western democracies, begging the allied governments to cease their intervention, which would only strengthen Bolshevism.

"They refused to listen to us," said Kerensky, "and you see the result."

Blockade of Russia a Crime
Kerensky described the blockade of Russia as a crime and declared if it were continued longer it would drive the people to desperation, with appalling consequences. The only chance of enabling the people of Russia to rid themselves of Bolshevism and establish a free and Democratic regime, he said, was to allow Russia to re-establish free relations with the rest of the world, as the effect of enclosing her was that the Russian people were cut off from all information except that supplied them by Bolsheviks.

Kerensky in his interview with regard to the declaration of labor leaders probably had reference to a recent letter of Arthur Henderson, leader of the labor party, in the British parliament, saying:

"If the government, refusing even to consider repeated offers of peace from the soviets, involves the country in a war over vast areas of Europe and Asia, the labor party will resist to the utmost such an unnecessary and reckless military adventure masquerading as a war of defense."
