COMMENCES SUIT ON A NOTE

The First National bank of Fort Collins, Colo., has commenced suit in the district court against Edward H. Hall to recover $9,740 principal and interest on certain promissory notes, alleged to be unpaid.

The complaint alleges that on December 10, 1910, the Fort Collins Bank & Trust company loaned Mr. Hall $11,000, accepting his promissory note for the payment of the amount. This note, the complaint alleges, was assigned to the plaintiff company. It is also alleged that on April 8, 1911, the plaintiff company loaned the defendant $7,000 and accepted his note for its payment.

The plaintiff avers that no part of the principal of these notes has been paid and that only a small part of the interest has been paid. The interest on the two notes has accumulated until the amount due at this time is claimed to be $9,740.

SHOPLIFTING CASE IN COURT

Claiming that he was an inveterate smoker and required a pipe for use while on the street, another to be smoked in his home and still a third which was to be kept at his place of business, was the explanation offered by H. D. Scott, a foreman at the Hess bakery, when arraigned before Judge Murphy this morning on the charge of shoplifting.

The complaining witness in the case is H. S. Crowther, manager of the E. P. Charleston & Co. store. A number of witnesses testified against Scott, who claims that he can furnish proof that he bought the articles which he is charged with having stolen.

To give the man an opportunity to present his evidence, Judge Murphy continued the case until Monday morning.

According to Manager Crowther the shoplifting took place late the afternoon of November 11. Scott was in the store with B. Unck when the manager was informed by a patron that the two men were stealing articles on display on the counters.

Manager Crowther called the men to an adjoining room and claims that a search of their pockets disclosed an assortment of unwrapped articles such as are carried in stock at his store. Among the articles found in Scott's pockets were three new 15-cent pipes in addition to one which had been used. The value of the articles found in the men's possession totalled about $1.50. Unck was not on trial this morning.

The only other matters occupying the court's attention this morning were charges of unlawful drunkenness against Sam Greenwell, and mendacity against David Bullock. Both cases against David Bullock. Both on five days and the latter twice that amount.

GERMANY'S BIG BLUNDER

Government is Criticized For Its Moroccan Upset

Berlin, Nov. 18.—With the settlement of the Franco-German negotiations concerning Morocco and the removal, so far as France and Germany are concerned, of this potential menace of war, a violent campaign has been opened by wide sections of the press and political groups against the government for having, as it is charged, indulged in prolonged negotiations, upset the credit of the country and brought Europe to the verge of hostilities only to score a full fiasco and reap the pelt of profits for the abandonment of its rights in Morocco.

"Ingo" papers, influential National Liberal leaders and broad classes of patriotic Germans attack the government for closing the bargain without having obtained a slice of the Moroccan empire. Other parties and papers assail it for saddling itself with what is described as a vast area of pestilential and gold-engulfing Congo swamp and jungle, worth far less than the small ceassons of German colonial territory in Togoland and the Kamerons which France receives in the settlement.

All parties, except those which must stand or fall with the government in the coming elections, are wildly indignant with the government and with Foreign Minister von Kiderlen-Waechter over the outcome and the "Moroccan fiasco" promises to swing dozens of seats as a campaign cry. Foreign attention, too, has been so largely concentrated on the latter details of the negotiations that the opinion that Germany has suffered an other diplomatic defeat is widely expressed.

From the point of view of the German Foreign Office, however, it is felt that the question of the success of failure of Germany should be decided only after reviewing the general course of Germany's Moroccan policy and eliminating misconceptions as to its aims prevalent both here and abroad.

In the first place, it is insisted in inspired quarters that the acquisition of territory in Morocco has never been in the present negotiations as in the earlier diplomatic struggles, an aim of Germany. Secondly, that France's predominant political influence in Morocco was fully recognized by the Franco-German agreement of February 9, 1909, and that the establishment of the French protectorate by the new treaty is therefore no loss for Germany, which in the third place, receives the thorough-going guarantee of commercial and economic equality in Morocco and the practical assurance of ensuring and protecting this open to her trade, which has been the main object of German diplomacy since it recognized that its policy up to and after Algiers had broken down.

The cardinal principle of this policy, launched in open opposition to the Anglo-French idea of disposing of Morocco by private bargain without consulting Germany, was that France could obtain no rights in Morocco without the consent of Germany and the other powers.

Strict and it is now admitted, mistaken adherence to this policy led to the rejection of a probable Moroccan bargain offered by Rouvier after the fall of Delcasse and to the refusal of Germany theoretically established her principle, only to find herself standing alone as its sole defender, England, Italy, Russia and Spain being pledged in various degrees not to oppose France and France continually finding new and always well-justified reasons for pushing on its gradual absorption of Morocco. Not being willing to risk a war every few months to check the various steps of this absorption, Germany threw overboard her first principle and admitted France's political interests in Morocco, receiving in exchange a paper guarantee of the open door and commercial equality.

Germany, according to the official German view, soon found it necessary to supplement this paper guarantee by adequate and detailed material safeguards and an agreement for Franco-German co-operation in certain African undertakings which were contemplated. It is asserted, under the agreement of 1909. Negotiations to this end were well under way by the fall of the Briand-Pichon ministry. It is claimed, negotiations were dropped, Germany found herself balked in the efforts to renew them and found the new French cabinet embarked instead on the expedition to Fez and the immediate military occupation of the Moroccan empire, an adventure which Germany was not prepared to support in advance, violated the Act of Algiers and restored to Germany its full liberty of action.

This brings the recital to the despatch of the German gunboat Panther to Agadir—an act which, it has been steadily maintained in official quarters, was in nowise designed to "stake out a claim" in South Morocco—but, it is now admitted frankly, was intended primarily not for the protection of German interests in the neighborhood, but to produce a resumption of the interrupted "conversations." In this it was promptly and theatrically successful.

The result, the foreign office claims, far from being a defeat or fiasco, but carried to a logical conclusion the Franco-German agreement of 1909, giving France the free political hand therein contemplated and to Germany and incidentally to the world at large adequate protection for freedom of trade, whether the country remains a French protectorate or is ultimately absorbed in the French colonial empire. That Germany has obtained a large increase of colonial territory and in addition has sidetracked one of the most pressing dangers to the peace of the world, it is claimed at the Foreign office, so much clear gain for herself and the world.

DYNAMITE UNDER A BRIDGE

More than twenty pounds of dynamite, enough of the explosive to wreck the largest building in the city, was found late yesterday afternoon by James Brown, a railroad man, cached under one of the abutments of the Southern Pacific bridge over the Ogden river, in the northwest section of the city.

While there was nothing to indicate that it had been placed there for the purpose of destroying the bridge, the officials of the Southern Pacific company are making a strenuous effort to discover some clue to the whereabouts of the person or persons who placed it there.

The efforts of the entire detective forces of the Harriman lines at this point are centered on the investigation now in progress. The railroad forces are being aided in every way by the city police officers. Believing that his intimate knowledge of the conditions here will be of value, Detective H. H. Gordon, formerly of the Oregon Short Line, but now of the Southern Pacific, was called to this city from the west, arriving here today. He will assist Detective Joseph McIntyre, of the Oregon Short Line, in the effort to trace down the guilty parties.

Investigation by the police today disclosed the fact that the box of dynamite originally came from a factory at Giant, California, and it was shipped to this city from Salt Lake, being received at the local freight office here by a man named Walter Seidel. The officers have so far been unable to secure any trace of this man. An effort is also being made in Salt Lake to learn from what wholesale house the explosive was shipped.

There is a possibility that the dynamite was the property of some Utah mining company and was stolen by a vagabond, who cached it under the bridge abutment until he could remove it to another location. The wooden box in which the explosive was found originally contained 50 pounds, but at the time of its discovery there were between 20 and 30 one-pound sticks in the box.

BANK FILES NOTICE FOR NEW TRIAL

The First National bank of this city has filed notice in the district court of intention to ask for a new trial in the case of Sarah M. Taylor against the bank, the plaintiff having been awarded a judgment against the bank a few days ago in the sum of $7,913, less $425.30. The judgment was given the plaintiff for conversion of certain stocks valued at $10,000.

The stock in question was held by the bank as collateral security for the payment of certain notes by J. I. Taylor, son of the plaintiff. Mrs. Sarah M. Taylor, the contention of the plaintiff being neither bank nor J. I. Taylor had been authorized to use the stock for that purpose.

The grounds stated by the bank for a new trial are: Misconduct of the jury, newly discovered evidence, excessive damages given under the influence of passion and prejudice, insufficiency of evidence to warrant a verdict, errors in law at the trial.

The case was tried before Judge Harris and consumed the greater part of a week.

SECURING JURY TO TRY MEMBERS OF "TAR PARTY"

LINCOLN CENTER, Kan., Nov. 17.—A jury to try Sheriff Clark, A. N. Simms and John Schmidt for assault and battery in connection with the tarring of Miss Mary Chamberlain probably will be secured tomorrow. Today's session was spent in examining talesmen, and when court closed the state had exhausted its challenges and the defense had seven remaining. Nine men were in the box.

To prevent Miss Chamberlain from relating her experiences to the jury the accused men have announced that they will prove they were not present at the tar party; that Miss Chamberlain testified at a justice court hearing of the case that she and Ed Ricard, the barber, who lured her to the scene of the tarring, met the three men now on trial coming up the road after the tarring was over, and that one of the men said: "It's all over, we're too late."

Village Gossips Were Busy. The defendants declare this makes an accessory part the only charge that can be placed against them. If the court makes such a ruling it is probable that Miss Chamberlain will not testify.

The gossips of Shady Bend have said everything they could to blacken me," she said this afternoon. "Not a word of it is true. They say my teacher's certificate was revoked on the ground of immorality. All such talk is false and wicked."

"Do you think the Democrats can carry Tennessee next time?" "I dunno. Do you think the Republicans can carry Maine?"—Philadelphia Record.

Superintendent John Child of the county infirmary states that because of the many visitors to the home it has become necessary for him to designate visiting days.
