OGDEN IS THE PLACE FOR HIM.

Mark Twain, when he was on the Hawaiian Islands, wrote a description of the sun-kissed gems of the Pacific that was extravagant with words of praise.

Why visitors are impressed with the islands is in part disclosed in the meteorological records. In thirty years the coldest was a balmy day of an average of 77 degrees.

When a man from Wyoming arrives in Ogden he removes his storm glasses, rubs the sand out of his eyes and, blinking as a test that his vision is clear, settles down to enjoy life by relaxation.

That sameness of weather is Hawaii's most entrancing influence over the stranger, but when months have passed and there is nothing in the wind, when the whole surface of the earth presents the same garment of green.

An Ogdenite went to Honolulu, intending to remain on the islands six months. Landing, he confessed to having found the ideal spot and he confirmed all Mark Twain had said and was willing to attest to even more.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that contain Mercury. as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces.

WATERWORKS DEAL AND BUSINESS TO BE INVESTIGATED.

Editor Standard—I notice in the columns of the Salt Lake Tribune that Mayor Brewer has "Called Bill Glasmann" by asking the five cashiers of the Ogden banks to be appointed to audit the first six months' business of the waterworks under city management.

Second—I will give $100 to the Martha society if the waterworks report shows that about $2,900 was expended for repair shop and store room.

By all means, let the waterworks deal, purchase, receipts and expenses be investigated. As Mr. Brewer wants to name five men to investigate the matter, I ask the right to name just one man to go over the books, records, etc.

WM. GLASSMANN. The foregoing answer to a challenge in the Salt Lake Tribune should be accepted by Mayor Brewer for it promises to clear away a confusion which exists as to the financial condition of the Ogden City waterworks.

The wording of the mayor's request for an investigation reads as though the chief executive of the city was somewhat in doubt himself as to the report of the waterworks committee of the city council. He wants to know, and so do the taxpayers, whether the city has expended on the waterworks more than it has received.

Now do not allow this suggestion to end in the mere proposal. If five cashiers have not the time to give to the investigation, then call in five business men of high standing and make the search of the records a public one.

Should the city administration drop the matter after simply making this request, the people will be more eager than ever for an investigation as there would then attach to the mayor's message to the council more significance than is at present disclosed.

POVERTY AND ART IN EUROPE.

Danver News: The picture which Samuel Gompers draws of working conditions in Belgium is a dark one. But it is not all dark. The story which he tells of the sweatshop tailor who fills in his enforced leisure by painting portraits is one of the high lights.

Art is commonly said to be the daughter of wealth and the granddaughter of commerce. Broadly speaking, this is true. The great artistic outbursts of the world's history, those of Greece and Rome and the Italian renaissance and the Low Countries followed hard upon a great increase in national wealth.

It is found in a society in which the standard of living is low, but is fixed and is forlorn. In such a society man does not try to rise in life, for he knows that to be impossible. He tries only to surround his appointed pathway with beautiful things.

The New York Herald has made a careful canvass of some of its heaviest advertisers, with a view to securing their opinions as to whether or not they consider it good business to attempt to influence editorial expressions.

From other testimony than this of Mr. Gompers it would seem that the age of humble but beautiful craftsmanship is returning in many parts of Europe. We trust that modern science will find some way to conserve the beauty thus offered without losing the

WHEN EVERYBODY WILL BE UP IN THE AIR.

Zeppelin makes a flight of 220 miles in an airship. Blériot crosses the English Channel, the Wrights sail over a measured course and meet the government requirements. Willard flies ten miles at Mineola, Curtiss receives recognition at Paris as an aviator, and half a dozen other venturesome fellows hold attention by their experiments in aviation.

This all presages a great development of air machines, and points to the day not far distant when flying will not be limited to a few experimenters, but will be enjoyed by any one with the courage and inclination to sail on high.

Two boys under thirteen years of age recently built an aeroplane at their country home near New York City. The frame was of bamboo and the covering of the box-shaped ship was of strong paper. They possessed no motor and depended on the elevation of a ten-foot platform for the initial motion.

When youngsters of that age are able to make their own flying machines, heavier-than-air, there is no guessing as to what is coming within this decade. Everybody will be up in the air who is not weighted down with infirmities or aversion to being one of the "higher ups."

THERE IS NO PROFIT IN STEALING.

The young fellow who goes into thievery as a business will meet with the disappointing experience that thieving returns small gains, and the profit obtained is at great cost in effort. The proof of this is in the following taken from an eastern paper:

By means of a diary which contains a complete record of his operations a burglar in Pennsylvania shows that he has "bagged" about $400 from 109 "jobs." It happens that at this same time a man arrested in New York after a brief but determined career at flat-burglary declares: "I haven't made expenses while I have been at it."

Nothing has been demonstrated more plainly and repeatedly than that thieving in the ordinary professional sense does not pay. There have been famous criminals and famous "hauls" in the history of burglary, but no one tells the tale of a prosperous house or family with the "jiminy" or bunch of skeleton keys belonging properly in its coat-of-arms.

It is difficult to imagine a glamour of disreputable adventure or a lust for the excitement of plotting and carrying out a "job" sufficient to lead men into the direct, almost inevitable sacrifice of social and financial opportunity.

ARE SEPARATE AND DISTINCT.

It is sometimes true, but happily the conditions are rapidly improving, that advertisers are seized with the notion that the newspaper in which they advertise ought to adopt an editorial and news policy precisely in accord with their own views.

The large advertiser—the man who advertises in order to induce people to come to his store and buy his goods—advertises as a business proposition, and he does not bother his head about the editorial policy of the paper in which his advertising is placed.

Mr. Smith remained at home and attended the parish school. He was naturally studious and apt in mathematics. He left home in 1864 and found employment with a baker in Modern Wells, a village about three and a half miles distant.

possibilities of sheep raising and in the early '70s began to familiarize himself with the best methods of handling sheep. In 1880 he was ready to start in business for himself.

The newspapers published influenced and biased news and other reports they would cease to interest the general public and would consequently be useless as advertising mediums.

This did not affect the complacency of the Herald, as is indicated by this terse little remark: "If Mr. Straus sees fit to cut off his firm's nose to spite his face, that, of course, is his funeral."

The man who advertises in a newspaper does so hoping to receive results therefrom. The newspaper adopts its line of policy without regard to the wishes of any particular advertiser and follows that policy as best it can.

In view of the fact that the accuracy of the report of the superintendent of the waterworks department submitted some time ago has been questioned, Mayor Brewer last night sent a communication to the city council recommending that a special committee be appointed to audit the accounts of the department.

THE MAYOR'S PLAN.

The mayor is anxious that no partisan bias shall enter into the work of the committee or its conclusions be influenced by political bias. In this Mayor Brewer is right. Politics and business ought to be kept as widely apart as the two oceans.

The Examiner believes that Mayor Brewer has taken the right step. He has faith in the integrity of the bank experts of Ogden and in their ability to audit the accounts and make a clear and accurate return of the facts and figures. If there is need for "investigation" Mayor Brewer courts that investigation.

Owing to the fact that the weather will be quite warm during the week of the Four State Fair, the entries for a pen of poultry has been reduced, from one male and six females to one male and three females.

In all other classes of the poultry department, other than chickens, the entry will consist of one pair, the young birds will only compete against the young, and the old against the old in all departments.

A. R. SMITH CALLED BY DEATH

PROMINENT RESIDENT OF NORTH OGDEN DIES OF DIABETIS.

Wealthy Sheep Man Survived by Wife, a Son and a Daughter—Well Known Character.

A R. C. Smith, a prominent sheep man of the state, died at his residence in North Ogden yesterday morning about 9 o'clock, after suffering for about six weeks from diabetes.

Mr. Smith came to Ogden in his early manhood. By economy and industry he became one of the solid men of this region. He was born in Cast. Morton, Worcestershire, England, August 3, 1852, and was the son of Samuel and Mary Elizabeth Smith.

Mr. Smith remained at home and attended the parish school. He was naturally studious and apt in mathematics. He left home in 1864 and found employment with a baker in Modern Wells, a village about three and a half miles distant.

He remained with his uncle for a year and then went to Skull Valley and worked on a ranch. He liked the work and became impressed with the possibilities of sheep raising and in the early '70s began to familiarize himself with the best methods of handling sheep. In 1880 he was ready to start in business for himself. He started with a thousand head of sheep, and the profits derived from this small flock were used in buying more.

AUDITING OF THE BOOKS

OF WATERWORKS DEPARTMENTS IS RECOMMENDED.

Mayor Brewer Suggests That Bank Cashiers Be Appointed to Do the Work.

Mayor Brewer, in a communication to the city council last night, stated that inasmuch as the statement of Superintendent Kircher of the waterworks department had been questioned, he recommended that a committee of one or more disinterested persons entirely free from political bias, be appointed to audit the accounts and make a public report of the findings.

The matter was referred to the waterworks committee, with power to act. Councilman Austin voted against the proposition. In the communication Mayor Brewer suggested that it might be well to appoint the cashiers of the five Ogden banks to do the auditing.

Current Expenses. The committee on claims reported current expenses for the month of July amounting to $3,035.86, which were allowed and warrants for their payment ordered drawn. The committee on laws recommended that the city attorney be advised to compromise the damage suit of Hattie J. Miller against Ogden.

In the matter of the request made some time ago by A. L. Agee for an appropriation by the council for the Auditing fund, the committee having the matter in hand reported against the appropriation. The report was adopted.

The report of the committee on Finance against the allowing of damages to Emily Champagne, asked for because of alleged damages to real estate caused by certain curbing and grading done at the instance of the city, was adopted.

Railroad Wants Water.

A communication was read from the waterworks department calling attention to the application of the Harriman interests for a supply of water from the city plant, and explaining that if the contract were entered into there would necessarily have to be passed a new ordinance providing for a change in the present water schedule.

The city engineer reported that he had received protests against the creation of some of the newly arranged sewer districts. The matter was sent back to the engineer and he was advised to figure the protests and to determine whether jurisdiction had been obtained in the premises, and if it had, or as soon as it should, to ask for bids for advertising.

The request of the city recorder for eight copies of the Ogden City directory, that is now being completed, was granted.

The clerk of the municipal court reported $2,262 collected during the last month in fines and forfeitures. The matter of water supply to the street superintendent for sprinkling purposes and its cost was referred to the finance committee.

Vacation for Fire Chief.

Fire Chief Thomas J. Paine was granted a leave of absence for two weeks that he might attend the convention of fire chiefs of the nation at Grand Rapids, Mich.

Miscellaneous accounts against the waterworks department for $1,148.97 were allowed, as was also the payroll of the department for the month in the sum of $900.90.

Regarding the matter of having street car tracks laid on Lincoln avenue prior to the paving of the street, the city engineer reported that he had written to the Salt Lake & Ogden Railroad company about it and had received no response.

To Place Poles. The council decided that it is necessary that a committee be appointed to take charge of the placing of street car poles in the streets.

and the engineer will advise with this committee. On motion of Councilman Dickson, persons who have failed to do their sidewalk paving in some of the districts will be notified by the city engineer that the paving must be done within the next thirty days.

A petition asking for the adoption of what is known as the Taylor addition as a part of the city was referred to the committee on streets and the city engineer.
