HOW PROFESSOR HAMOND MET HIS WIFE

(Original.)
It was lecture day at the Woman's club. A gentleman—gentlemen were invited for the lecture—sat in the reading room by a table, passing the time glancing over periodicals. Two ladies entered and seated themselves in easy chairs by a window. The one was fat, gray haired and self contained, the other angular and with sharp eyes.

"Who is this Professor Hamond, Lucy, who is to lecture today?" asked the elder.

"All I can tell you is that he is a Ph. D. of some German university; that he studied for the ministry, but prefers to lecture."

"Have you heard him?"

"No, but Clara Stewart has. She says the lecture he is to give today on 'The Family' is very touching."

"Humph! If what I hear is correct he'd better lecture to himself on that subject."

A lady of refined appearance strolled into the room in time to hear the remark. Going to a newspaper rack, she took down a file of papers and proceeded to look for some item. The ladies at the window glanced at her and lowered their tones, but, becoming interested in what they were saying, soon forgot both her and the gentleman at the table.

"What have you heard?"

The elderly lady leaned forward and whispered something in her companion's ear.

"You don't mean it, Mrs. Gunby?"

"Fact."

"What does the lecture committee mean by inviting such a man to speak to this club?"

"His wife's almost broken hearted about it."

"And think of the poor children!"

"I'll cut the lecture."

"I wouldn't miss it for anything. I like to see those human vamps and hear them talk, knowing how corrupt they are."

The lady looking through the newspapers stepped toward the conversationalists.

"I beg your pardon, ladies," she said, "but if you are discussing Professor Hamond, who is to lecture to us today, you do him a great wrong."

"Do you know him?" asked Mrs. Gunby, drawing down the corners of her mouth ominously.

"Only through a course of lectures he has published. The man who wrote them must be pure at heart."

"We are perfectly willing," said Mrs. Gunby, "that you should have your opinion, and we propose to have ours."

She punched the floor with her parasol handle with such vehemence that the gentleman at the table looked up.

"Pardon me, ladies," he said. "Not being a member of your club, I perceive it is proper that I should retire while you are engaged in personal remarks, but before going I would like to say that I am personally acquainted with Professor Hamond, and so far from neglecting his family he has no family. He is a bachelor."

Mrs. Gunby and her companion arose from their seats and, with very red faces, stalked out of the room, leaving the gentleman and the other lady together.

"Permit me to thank you," he said, "for defending one of my sex who, whatever his shortcomings, has no blame for maltreating an imaginary family. Is such criticism allowable in your clubhouse?"

"Certainly not. I shall report it. Will you give me your name that I may refer to you in the matter?"

"I beg that in this instance you will not do so. It would be very unpleasant for me."

"I see. Such gossip is beneath your interference, and you are wise not to permit yourself to be mixed up in it. We haven't another such woman as Mrs. Gunby in the club. How she got in I can't imagine."

"Why, professor," exclaimed the president of the club, hurrying in, "I didn't know you had arrived. Let us go to the auditorium."

"First, I must beg an introduction to this lady whom I have met casually."

"Certainly. Miss Lee, Professor Hamond. Miss Lee is one of our board of governors."

Miss Lee stood looking at Professor Hamond in astonishment, a slight blush rising to her cheeks—a blush she did not need to make her beautiful.

There was a clapping of hands as the president escorted the lecturer to the rostrum. A fat woman in one of the front rows made a commotion in trying to get out from an interior seat and waddled through the aisle toward the door.

"What's the matter with Mrs. Gunby?" asked one of the ladies in the audience of another. "Her face is red as a turkey cock."

At this point the lecturer began his address, charming his hearers with the beauty of his ideas, the fact that guided their expression and the heart there was within them. The defense of Professor Hamond by one who judged him simply by his written words comprised the closing sentence of the lecture. Quoting an eminent man, he said, "One who can give forth such sentiments must be pure at heart."

This acknowledgment of the lecturer's appreciation, intended for but one of his audience, was lost, as such, upon the rest. Miss Lee at the moment put her handkerchief to her face, but no one noticed.

Two years later the members of the Woman's club received cards to the wedding of Professor Hamond and Miss Lee. Mrs. Gunby was not taken to task for her ill-timed gossip, but she found it more pleasant to resign from the club.

CORA ASHWORTH.

A Bride of Morocco.
"Says an observer of conditions in modern Morocco: 'The wife is bought in Morocco today, and the sum paid is agreed upon between her father and the would-be husband.' Sometimes a cow may be sufficient to procure a bride, at other times many cattle and several dollars are necessary for her purchase. The bride is, of course, dressed in suitable costume, but the most interesting part of her toilet to a stranger is the decoration of henna. The henna, pounded and mixed with lemon juice, is sometimes painted directly on to her face, arms, hands and legs. At other times a stencil pattern is put on her flesh and the perforated holes filled up with the henna. By the time this is completed and she is attired with a dark design. Society women in more enlightened countries who wear lace blouses in a hot summer sun often find their arms and necks burned into a pattern which has much the same effect as the henna tattoo on the poor little Moorish maid."

How the Burro Eats Thistles.

The Rocky mountain burro, one of the most sagacious of animals, seeks the thistle as a favorite food, and the pungent spines with which it protects its leaves at every part of its tenderness of grazing animals for it. Few experiences of frontier life are more amusing than to watch the donkey's attack upon a large bull thistle. He walks about it, seeking for a favorable opening, projects his lip gingerly against its spines and jerks back as he feels its prickles. He surveys it pensively for a moment or two and then slowly raises his foot and strikes it, patting to watch the effect of the blow. He then perhaps strikes it from the other side and watches it from the blows become rapid, and at length it is broken down and thoroughly trampled, after which it is consumed to the last vestige.—Country Life in America.

A Homiletical Repeater.

"It was in a small German congregation that I heard a preacher who when he had completed his introduction and first point said, 'I have come to the second head.' A man rose, rubbed his eyes, folded his arms across his breast and appeared ready for that head. When it was finished he had overcome the drowsiness and sat down. During the elucidation of the third head three other men stood up. At the close of his sermon the preacher found all his people asleep. As he stopped they all looked up and seemed greatly relieved. But the good man said, 'You have slept all through the sermon, and as this is a sermon you all ought to hear I will begin it anew.'—Ecclesiastical Review.

The Face.

Nature has laid out all her art in beautifying the face. She has touched it with vermilion, planted in it a double row of ivory, made it the seat of smiles and blushes, lighted it up and enlivened it with the brightness of the eyes, lining it at each side with curious organs of sense, given it airs and graces that cannot be described and surrounded it with such a flowing shade of hair as sets all its beauties in the most agreeable light.—Addison.

Wanted to Be in Time.

A wealthy Parisian, tired of supporting his nephew, determined to get him married off and settled. He called upon a matrimonial agent and looked over his album of candidates for husbands. To his horror he found the picture of his own pretty young wife. He reproached her and demanded an explanation. "I do not deny it," she said, "but it was last year, when, as you know, dearest, you had been given up by all the doctors."

Too Personal.

"What caused you to strike the customer?"

"He sets down, an' when I asks him what it'll be," explained the new waiter, "he sez, 'You ain't got no brains, have you?' an' then I soaked him one."

A Change of Climate.

His Wife—John, dear, the doctor says I need a change of climate. Her Husband—All right. The weather prophet says it will be colder tomorrow.

Those who wish to appear wise among fools, among the wise seem foolish.—Quintillian.
