A LESSON OF FIDELITY.

A man, supposed to be the husband, nailed a woman to the draining board of a sink in her home in Pittsburgh. On reading the news of this atrocious and fiendish deed there were general expressions of horror over it, and there should be, but the expressions were generally accompanied with words of bitter censure and reproach against the brute who committed the act. Yet when one reads into the story there is found as a motive the alleged fact that the woman was accused of infidelity by her husband.

If there is one thing that will arouse demagogical passions of jealousy, rage, hatred and madness within the bosom of a husband it is the thought that his own beloved wife has been untrue to him and it is not denied that there is some basis of justification for this violent mental agitation providing there is sufficient grounds to give a foothold of substantiation to the thought. To wreck a man's faith in the fidelity of the woman he has loved, cherished and honored, is to wreck his whole being and when it comes with the sudden awfulness that it sometimes does, he is temporarily turned into a madman and he is not wholly responsible for what he does. True some minds are of an overjealous nature, too prone to seize trivial and circumstantial evidence as sufficient foundation for flying into fits of uncontrollable rage, but the average mind as a rule carefully investigates and weighs, or should do so, with what ethical knowledge at command, the evidence that is presented to the senses before taking action upon it.

If the husband of the woman who is supposed to have so brutally mistreated her is of the average intelligence and is not an Othello, not subject to an aberrant state of the passion of jealousy—and it would be a question for alienists—certainly there is ground for the belief that he had some provoking occasion for his fiendish act. So condemnation should not be impetuously placed upon the man in this case until reflection brings out just cause for the same. Yet there is probable cause for the condemnation in the doctrine that each mind should cultivate and altruism that is opposed to retaliative punishment and holds that one should suffer alone and let divine punishment take its course.

In this case, however, there is brought to mind the great lesson of fidelity, both to man as well as woman, the lesson based upon the command in the decalogue and may that lesson be impressed again and again upon every mind that reads these reflections upon this news story from Pittsburgh.

WHAT DID IT?

Before the election Democratic papers in this state, as well as speakers of that faith, held out the idea that the people of West Virginia were tired of the national policies of the Republican party, such as the tariff. All Democratic platforms in the state denounced the policies of the Republican party, both national and state. The Democratic campaigners emphasized these denunciations. They declared confidently that the people of this state had rebelled against these meeting of the committee representing the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners. This committee has plans afoot to reduce the cost of life insurance at least one-fourth and possibly one-third. Mr. Scherr will also suggest to the Governor recommendations to the legislature that will benefit the people in reference to life and other insurance. Mr. Scherr is among the foremost of the land who are endeavoring to bring about insurance reforms. Let us all give him the credit he deserves and the great moral support his efforts have a right to command.

As the Telegram stated just after the election Candidate Riley and the Democratic papers that supported him are taking solace in the alleged fact that he ran ahead of his ticket—the same sort of solace Barnes took. Barnes said he ran twenty-five hundred ahead of his ticket and the Wheeling Register has it figured out that Riley ran only nine hundred ahead of his ticket. From this it appears Barnes has the better of Riley to the tune of sixteen hundred votes as a runner. But neither came any way near election, and there is no reason why both should not be given full opportunity to get what consolation they can out of it.

The Fairmont Times thinks so well of Clarksburg that it seems anxious to move that place up to our point on the map. It prints a map showing Clarksburg to be on the transcontinental system achieved by Harriman and then says Fairmont will not be the least important point on the gigantic line, when in truth Fairmont is not on that line at all according to the map it publishes. Our wish is that Fairmont could be on the great line with us, as we have ever taken a neighborly interest in that city. Can the Times not work it some way to get Fairmont not only on the map but also on the line? Do this and we will be greatly pleased.

THE LIGHT IS BREAKING.

The Morgantown Chronicle has made the following discovery: Pendleton county has only one newspaper. The editor, A. A. Martin, has been a Democrat all his life, and he stood by the party faithfully in the past. But he is now thoroughly disgusted with the action of some of the party leaders, and in the course of a column article in which he lays down some sound facts for the Democrats to think over, he says:

"The Democratic party was once grand and patriotic, but men of narrow and strange ideas have forced out the old patriots and pushed themselves in and are drawing the party into hopeless ruin, and a moment's reflection proves it true in this county. Hundreds of the best Democrats in the State see the new tax laws as we do, and Democratic legislative candidates made speeches for them. The tax laws are here to stay."

It has not been very prominently brought to public notice that the various state officials are at all times enlisted in efforts and movements to bring about better conditions in every line for the people. The latest in this particular is that of State Auditor Arnold C. Scherr, who has gone to Chicago to the

At the Odeon.

The Odeon was very well crowded to see the great "Mail Robbery" and "The Dream of the Rabbit Fiend." The public was very well pleased. They were pronounced as the best pictures ever seen. "The Rabbit Fiend" created a great sensation in Boston and New York and all large cities it has ever been seen in. It is great.
